The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 S	Pass	3 D	Pass
3 S	Pass	4 S	Pass
4 N T	Pass	5 H	Pass
6 S	All Pass

South was the declarer at six spades. West led the jack of hearts. South won with the king and went into a huddle. Finally South made his decision. He saw that his only problem was to avoid the loss of more than one trump trick. So he led the three of spades, West played the four. South played the five from dummy—and it held the trick. The hand was now spread with the concession of one spade trick to West.

This safety play was made to guard against a holding of all four outstanding spades in either opponent's hand. If East had won that first spade trick, everything would still have been all right. That would have meant that the spades had split favorably (not worse than 3-1), and that the ace and king could pick up the balance.

Had West shown out on the first lead of trumps, South would have played dummy's king and led back through East's Q J 4.

True, South could have made seven by laying down the ace and king of trumps, IF the outstanding spades had been divided 2-2. But who cares about an extra 30 points with about fifty times that much at stake.

A FAMOUS NEW ENGLAND COMMUNITY

diversified products from minute screws to giant presses . . . factories which turn out money in the form of paychecks to thousands of workers each week . . . this is Bridgeport, booming along the industrial road to progress.

But Bridgeport is also a city of homes, with well-paid workers. More than 1,124 acres of green parks and two miles of superb beaches are in the city, providing fun and frolic for the youngsters, quiet and contentment for their elders.

Civic Imagination

For a city to grow rich and spend wisely demands civic leaders beyond the ordinary. P. T. Barnum, circus magnate of all time, was Mayor of Bridgeport, donator of parkland, a Bridgeport man loved by all. His first visions of a lovely city have been brought to fruition by successive generations of able leaders. Jaspar McLevy, for 17 years the Socialist mayor of Bridgeport, plus the hard-working Chamber of Commerce have brought beauty right onto Main Street. A building plan coordinating individual stores into one harmonious architectural group, all based on a master plan, was placed in operation years ago.

Now, new buildings are built and old ones altered in accordance with this privately sponsored committee and shop-keepers up and down the main street of Bridgeport have grasped the theory and placed it into action.

Brand Name City

Among the 500 or more different manufacturing and assembling plants in Bridgeport, time-honored and familiar brand names stand out in gold leaf and blue neon. Wherever the Marine Corps landed, from Guadalcanal to Tarawa, they carried with them products from Bridgeport, not only to win the war, but to make life bearable. The Aer-a-Sol insecticide, famed DDT, was a product of Bridgeport Brass. Automobiles everywhere carry hundreds of parts made either in Bridgeport, or on Park City machine tools.

A glimpse of Bridgeport from the train windows will show dozens of brand names such as Singer, General Electric, names familiar to millions, for manufacturing is the keynote of Bridgeport. Civic beauty is its outward sign. Together the factories and parks have made this city a vital, humming, prosperous one, the industrial capital of Connecticut.
