"Local News"

In 1770 Dr. Thomas Flint bought a large tract of land, including among his holdings the present Round Top Farm and the Lincoln County Fair Grounds. Dr. Flint was a surgeon in the Revolutionary War and was later a member of the Order of the Cincinnati. He is buried in the little burying ground directly across the street from the County Fair.

The building in which you are being served was formerly the Exhibition Building of the Lincoln County Fair. The Lunch Room was the Parimutuel Building; the Gift Shop, the Veterinary's office. The Lincoln Agricultural and Horticultural Association was first organized in 1852 and early fairs were held in Bath and Rockland.

There are several theories as to the derivation of the name, "Damariscotta." According to one explanation, the name comes from the Indian word, "Madameskontee," meaning "plenty of alewives." One of the most persistent legends states that "Damariscotta" comes from the name of a Sagamore, "Damarin," chief of the Wawenock Indians.

This section which is known locally as "Round Top" was so named by members of Maine regiments who had fought at Little and Big Round Top in the Battle of Gettysburg.

In driving east along Route 1, only a short distance beyond County Fair may be seen glimpses of the famous Shell Heaps, high white mounds which shine brightly across the river. It is believed that these enormous deposits mark the spot where generations of aboriginal tribes feasted on shellfish many hundreds of years ago.

Within a few miles of County Fair are four of the most historic churches of Maine. Just off Route 129, the road to South Bristol and Christmas Cove, stands a square white building, substantial in build and plain and simple in outline, the Old Walpole Meeting House, erected in 1772 by the inhabitants of the town of Bristol . . . Not far from Head Tide, a delightful oldtime hamlet, famed as the birthplace of the poet, Edwin Arlington Robinson, stands the Old Alna Meeting House, built in 1789 . . . Only a short distance off old Route 1 in Waldoboro is the German Lutheran Church, a large wooden building of simple design and architecture, built in 1785. In the old cemetery behind the church are names showing the German origin of the first settlers of Waldoboro . . . About two miles from County Fair, at Damariscotta Mills, is St. Patrick's Catholic Church, built in 1803. St. Patrick's owes its erection to the efforts of the French exile, M. de Cheverus, who in the year 1836 was made a Cardinal of France.
