Campus Crime: A Growing Concern

A glance into security on the Johnson & Wales Campus -- What can be done to stay safe

By John Ortenzio

A significant problem in today's society is without a doubt one's safety and defense. There is no greater an issue, then one's life, health, and well-being. A college environment is now one of the highest crime related area's in the country. America's colleges and universities have turned into high crime communities. Sexual assault and rape are major campus problems, student physical violence is growing, and student illegal gambling is a new campus business. Recently a survey was conducted by the U.S. House of Representatives, it reported that thirty-eight percent of college women questioned had either been raped or were victims of felony sexual assaults.

The Johnson & Wales University campus is protected and supervised by a team of about 40 to 50 members who form our Safety & Security. They are responsible for the protection of students, faculty, staff and University property. They attempt to ensure our safety by using foot patrols, vehicle patrols, and bike patrols; when Providence weather is on their side. Some services and programs they offer are educational bulletins, crime alerts, seminars on safety habits, awareness programs and medical transportation.

Every person's life or even organization is a mirror of the people who are an essential part of it. Sadly, crime on campus has been known to be one of the best kept secrets in America.

In 1986, a young girl by the name of Jeanne Clery was tortured, raped, sodomized and murdered in her dormitory room at Lehigh University. Her killer was a drug and alcohol abuser, a Lehigh student whom Jeanne had never met. He gained access to her room by proceeding, unopposed through three propped-open doors, each of which should have been locked. Her killer was convicted and sentenced to death. The parents of Jeanne Clery exclaim, "We learned that institutional response to such tragedies could involve callousness, cover-ups, and stonewalling. Lehigh, in an ill-conceived effort to protect its image, produced a self serving report, written by one of its trustees, K.P. Pendleton, which concluded that there was no negligence on the part of the University and that there present safety policy's were complete. This, despite the administrations knowledge of prior violent crimes on the campus and knowledge of Shipyard Street and Harborside Boulevard were colored green, purple, and gold early Saturday morning October 5th as the site of this year's Fat Tuesday Homecoming Parade. Over 350 families from across the United States gathered to watch clubs, organizations, and residence halls parade their extravagant floats down the streets of the Harborside campus to compete for cash prizes. A distinguished panel of judges consisted of Vice President of Student Affairs, Art Gallagher; Dean of Students, Terry Addison; Associate Dean of Culinary Arts, Paul

McVety; Coordinator of Multicultural Center, Pat Trosclair; Student Government Association President, Albert Hilliard. This year's parade also welcomed Chancellor & Mrs. Gaebe and Mrs. Vilma Triangelo. Director of Athletics and Master of Ceremonies, John Parente kept the crowd entertained in between performances by those groups competing to win both the judges' and parents' vote. UIB President and Parade Coordinator Jeannette Williams comments, "It is great to meet everyone from various clubs and organizations and see the creative floats and performances that they put together." Ace Hall brought home a check for 750 dollars with a shagadelic Austin Powers-themed performance to win first prize in the performance category. "Oh Behave!" McNulty Hall's "Midnight on Bourbon Street" float won not only first prize in the float category, but the Parent's Pick Award as well.

After the parade, students and their families gathered underneath the Harborside Academic Center Parking Lot Main Tent to enjoy food, novelties, and fine music at the King's Day Luncheon. Clubs and organizations anxiously awaited the announcement of the parade winners. "Everyone absolutely put a lot of effort into their float. It is interesting to see who wins over the parents vote though," states Assistant Director of Student Activities, Tanya McGinn. Other parade participants included Cranston High School East Junior ROTC Color Guard, City of Providence Mounted Police, and 2002 Homecoming King and Queen, Wilfrid Dauphin and Lisa Duby. J&W school spirit prevails as students show their families a good time at this year's Family Weekend and Homecoming Celebration.

In Good Hands with Jody Adams

By John Karbowski

The names Rialto and Chef Jody Adams are frequently uttered when speaking about the Boston restaurant scene. They have often been paired with words such as "exceptional", "wildly appealing", and even "a dream come true." Jody remains a force to be reckoned with in her profession, and has gained acclaim from some of the highest-ranking chefs in the industry. On Tuesday September 24th, the Harborside auditorium was bristling with anticipation as students lined the seats to welcome one of Boston's most highly decorated queens of cuisine.

Once Jody was introduced and the applause had quieted down, you could hear a pilot light go out. Jody started her lecture with a quote from her book, In the Hands of a Chef. "The shortest route I know to human happiness is cooking," she said, and it was quite apparent that no one could argue with that. Talking to a room of culinary students appeared as natural as if she were addressing her staff, and she spoke with great intensity and passion giving fair warning to those of us who are attempting to make a career in foodservice. "This is a difficult job, there is no doubt about it."

Jody got her first interest in cooking at a young age,

Is War With Iraq Right or Wrong?

National News Editorial

By: Rebecca Estime

The Bush administration has been committed to war with Iraq for a long time. They are trying to convince the public that their reasons are justified. President Bush's argument does not offer a clear enough reason as to why this war would be just. On the other hand there may be moral reasons to go to war.

One reason the President has offered is Iraq's development of weapons of mass destruction. This cannot, by itself, be a sufficient reason because other nations such as England and France possess these weapons and yet we do not insist on going to war with them. There must be other substantial reasons other than being nasty and having weapons of mass destruction which are necessary for the justification of warfare. Every country has the right of self-defense. If that right includes the possession of these weapons for one, then it entails the right of possession for any.

It is known that Saddam Hussein has used these weapons on his own people. The President raises an interesting point, that Hussein not only possess but also uses these weapons, not only uses them, but uses them unjustly. Still, is this still a valid reason for going to war? Of course not, tyrants have been killing their own people for centuries with all kinds of weapons without justifying warfare.

Another argument that rarely is raised at this point is that under the terms of the Gulf War cease-fire, Hussein's weapons of mass destruction program was supposed to be destroyed. This would do away with any Iraqi claim to a national right to possess these weapons, since Iraq lost an unjust war and agreed to these terms. One might argue that the moral justification of the Gulf War itself could be used to justify a continuation of hostilities, since the cease-fire is technically null and void. We must consider the risk to American soldiers. As citizens, these soldiers must be considered before engaging in a permissible war. We must also remember that the original cause of the Gulf War has been rescinded. The war would have to be justified strictly on the basis of a treaty violation, when wars really require a justification that appeals to the severe and continued loss of human life and property.

This leaves the administration with connecting Iraq with the already recognized war on terrorism. Since the President has made clear numerous times since the beginning that he will make no distinctions between those states that sponsor/harbor/protect terrorists and the terrorist organizations/members themselves, than war with Iraq under our current war with terrorists.

There is a demand by some that a direct line of responsibility for the NYC attack be drawn to Iraq in order to justify war with Iraq. On moral and legal grounds this demand is a mistake. There is no dispute that Iraq is engaged with many terrorist organizations including Al Queda. Since the war to stop terrorism requires that the government of the sponsoring nations be destroyed, when those governments have a choice to abandon that support and refuse to do so, they become fully responsible in a war.

Just like the Israelis should think seriously about killing all of Arafat's national command structure for it's repeated use of terrorist attacks; the United States should do the same to the multiple hostile terrorist states. The loss of life and property has reached warfare proportions. Since Iraq may have an increasing ability to offer a weapons of mass destruction deterrent, may think it is not only morally justified but wise to make Iraq the next target. And if this is the case our duty as citizens is to support him.

Summer Work Experience Program

The University Career Development & Alumni Relations Office explain what SWEP is and how it can be beneficial for JWU Students

By: Sheri Ispir

Sounds interesting, but what does SWEP actually mean? SWEP stands for the Summer Work Experience Program. Ok, so what does that mean to you? Well, if you take advantage of this opportunity, it could mean a summer job in your chosen field that translates into valuable work experience on your resume. On top of that, in addition to an hourly wage, you may also receive a scholarship of up to $1,000 upon successful completion of the program.

Many employers in the foodservice and hospitality industries now serve as host sites for SWEP students. Since this program is only offered during the summer time, many of the positions available will be in these industries since there is a high demand for seasonal help. Sites are located across the country and range from hotels and restaurants to conference centers and casinos. It is also important to mention that any Business or Technology student interested in SWEP should keep in mind that work experience even in an unrelated field will show potential employers that you are hard-working and disciplined. All students from all majors are welcome to join SWEP.

"We are looking for committed students," says Donna Beretta, the Summer Work Experience Coordinator. "This is a chance for a student to get out on their own, build their confidence and maybe even gain a permanent job after they graduate." In fact, students are encouraged to consider host site employers for whom they would want to work for upon graduation. The SWEP program offers both the student and the employer a chance to explore future employment connections.

According to B.T. Thompson, a J&W graduate and Executive Chef of Macky's Bayside Bar & Grill in Maryland, SWEP is a good investment for his restaurant. "This program not only helps me to fill summer positions, but also to fill future full-time management positions," states Thompson.

"I enjoy working with the SWEP students because they are eager to learn. In fact, as an employer, I am willing to pay a higher wage to a student in this program because of their commitment and interest in trying new things."

Students selected for this program are required to work 35-40 hours per week and act as full-time employees. Students may be responsible for housing if the chosen site does not provide this option. Transportation to and from the site as well as day-to-day transportation may also be needed. All companies vary in terms of the benefits offered.

So how do you sign up? Well the first step is to attend a SWEP information seminar. The schedule of upcoming seminars has been provided for your convenience. Please note that the location of these seminars will be announced in the near future. In the meantime, don't hesitate to contact Donna Beretta at 598-1420 with any questions.

SWEP Students Speak Out on Experience

What was your SWEP Experience Like?

"Two summers ago, I participated in SWEP at Keystone Resort, Colorado. The experience I gained from SWEP was really beneficial and I would definitely participate again. I was able to rotate between front desk, concierge and guest services. Upon finishing SWEP, I was offered a permanent job from Vail Resorts Management to return after graduation. This program offered me the hands-on experience and increased knowledge of the hospitality industry a student only gains outside of the classroom."

"I am glad I participated in SWEP because I gained experience, some extra money and a scholarship all at the same time. I had a lot of fun and I will definitely do this program again next year."

Chestnuts and Pine Street: A Classic JWU Student Union

Dear Students,

As an urban university we share the community with our neighbors. Private homes, businesses, churches, and city streets are all part of the city landscape tht we share.

Due to the tremendous growth of Johnson & Wales University the corner at Chestnut and Pine has become grid locked with student foot traffic and vehicles. Because of the congestion in this area I am asking for your assistance. In order to prevent an accident, and to lessen the congestion I am asking that you not congregate in this area. Double-parking of cars is a violation, which can lead to accidents.

These two simple measures of not congregating and not double parking will significantly reduce congestion. Your support and assistance in this effort will be greatly appreciated, and will provide a safer and more hospitable environment for you and our neighbors.

Please feel free to contact me with comments and/or suggestions. I thank you in advance for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

Terry H. Addison
Dean of Students

As Editor-In-Chief of The Campus Herald, It is my duty to provide a channel of communication for the student here at Johnson & Wales University. We are a bi-weekly, student-produced paper for the campus community. I strongly urge the students of Johnson & Wales to voice your opinions about campus topics in an effort to positively initiate change, and better our school community. It is upon us to let our voices be heard so tht we can be the catalyst for change.

Organization Spotlight

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) is an organization recently chartered on the Johnson & Wales campus, but has already had a significant impact.

In this Interview, Akosua Tyus will discuss her goals and mission for the NAACP.

N A A C P

How do you like being President?

It's an honor being the largest oldest organization. It's really an opportunity to make a positive impact on situations on campus that need to be address.

The NAACP has grown through the past year tremendously, how do you plan to continue that growth?

: Within the last year we've worked harder as a new organization on campus, We have activated many new committees, Political Action, Health Housing Committees, etc. and all of those different committees are going to look into situations that fall underneath their committee. We have more committees hitting more topics so we will be able to get more done on campus.

What do you plan to do this year that is an improvement from last year?

This year we want to increase diversity on campus as well as within different organization. Contrary to what people think, The NAACP is not just a Black organization, it is for the advancement of colored people. We promote multiculturalism and the advancement of people of colors all over .

What direction do you plan to take this year as far as events & community service goes?

This year we want to do a combination of social events , but also events that promote political, educational, economical empowerment as well.

What projects do you have planned for the future?

This year we plan to implement project Central, which is a mentorship program with Central High school, and also would like to start a mentorship program with JWU, where upperclassman work with underclassman to help them adjust to cultural shocks and just advice about being on a campus without parental supervision.

What is your goal or mission for the 2002-2003 NAACP Year?

The mission of NAACP Nationally is to promote the political, economical, educational, and social empowerment of people of color, in addition to eliminate racial prejudices, and educating the public on the contributions of African Americans and other people of color. So as a college chapter we plan to carry out that mission, but on a college level particularly educating college students on the accomplishment and helping then to see how they can be while in college.

7. Is there anyone you want to thank?

First, I would like to thank Ester Slack, Shemika Moore and Robin Taylor Bryant who are some of the few important founding members of our NAACP chapter here on Johnson & Wales University campus. If it was not for them we would not have been chartered. So for even giving birth to the idea of giving this organization to out campus is extremely important to give thanks to. But outside of that just to give thanks to the hard work that that is being done in out National Office in Baltimore, Maryland, everyone down from our President and Ceo Kweisi Mfume, To our Chairman of National Directors, Julian Bond and the staff and volunteers that associate on the National level.

If a person where to ask you why should they join the NAACP, what would you say?

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is the nation's oldest and again the largest civil right organization, and has paved the way to rights that we as African American and other people of color benefit from today. Even though becoming a financial member is not necessary to take an active role into caring the rights in equality of people of color, having a financial membership contributes to the strength of the organization providing legal support for people in certain situations.

Any other words of expression that you have?

We need to understand that were all brothers and sisters not divided by race, not divided by age, not divided by sexual orientation, but being able to identify our similarities and our commitment to the positive advancement of the human race. Being able to come together identifying that we are all have some goals here to accomplish. We should no longer be divided but advance together as one people.

at home with her mother. Mrs. Adams preached the importance of never accepting anything but the highest quality ingredients from local vendors, and instilled in Jody a desire to continually try something new and to push the creative envelope.

"Make it your business to cook just a little beyond your abilities!"

With no formal culinary training, Jody's Boston groundwork was paved under the tutelage of Chef Lydia Shire at Seasons restaurant. Later she advanced to sous chef of Hamersley's Bistro with Chef Gordon Hamersley as her mentor for four years. After completing four years as executive chef of Michela's in Cambridge, Jody and her two partners opened Rialto in September of 1994. Jody believes in spending a fair amount of time wherever you are employed. "Choose an environment that works for you." It is the only way to truly understand the mechanics of the chef in charge.

Jody's reputation for strong emphasis on freshness goes hand in hand with an "everyday commitment to surpassing what was done the day before. High quality with no shortcuts. ... You must remain respectful to the food. This is a changing time for cooks." Relying heavily on organics and local producers, it is no wonder that high on her list of inspiring chefs is Alice Waters. When asked if she could keep only three cookbooks, what would they be? Without hesitation she named: The Joy of Cooking, Lulu's Provencal Table, and World of Food. She also recommends Near a Thousand Tables: A History of Food by Felipe Fernandez-Armesto.

Being a woman in what was then referred to as a male dominated profession, Jody carries with her the memories of her first kitchen, where there was an equal balance of men and women, and one chef ... a woman. In every kitchen that she has worked in since that time, there has been room for both men and women to excel and she has "never felt passed over because she was a woman." That pretty much sums it up. It's not a matter of man or woman, what matters is the quality of the work and the quality of the food.

Jody's customers think so. She has been in this industry for nearly twenty years and feels no need to reinvent herself. She stands with pride and commitment behind what she refers to as the "kitchen in her mind." Her imaginative devotion to cooking has brought her to the forefront of the Boston food scene and has set many eminent standards. Imagine, one woman is a mother, wife, restaurateur, teacher, cookbook author, lastly and most certainly not least, a brilliant chef. Both learning everyday and teaching are what has kept her coming back into the kitchen, day after day, year after year. Never one to represent anything

Only 24 And Already With A Recipe For Success

By: Dita Papraniku

Does 24 seem like a good age to be an Executive Chef, on the Olympic Culinary Team, and on TV? Well it does to Ronny Pietzner of Bornstedt, Germany. Chef Pietzner participated in a cooking demonstration at the Harborside Auditorium on October 2, 2002. Chef Pietzner is the first DVC (Distinguished Visiting Chef) of the 2002-2003 school year. "The Distinguished Visiting Chef program was established in 1979 to honor outstanding culinarians and at the same time, provide an expanded learning experience for culinary arts students at Johnson & Wales University," Dean Guggenmos, College of Culinary Arts. Guggenmos describes Chef Pietzner as "Ambitious yet modest, passionate, and quality conscious. Also respected by others in the profession." Chef Pietzner is currently the Executive Chef at Krongut-Bornstedt, a renovated royal estate in Germany outside of Berlin.

The menu for the demonstration consisted of four courses and included a dessert. Chef Pietzner is not too familiar with the English language, and as a result, a student was there to translate and assist in the demonstration. The first course featured a cold appetizer, A Symphony of Vegetables with Red Onion Vinaigrette. Diced beefsteak tomatoes were sautéed with onions and fresh herbs and deglazed with tomato juice. The vegetables are then pureed and spooned in a bright yellow baby bell pepper. The baby bell pepper was not previously cooked. The garnish is cups of rice paper about the size of quarters filled with fried turnips and leeks. Chef Pietzner stressed the importance of not overcooking the turnip, for it would turn bitter. Red beets are boiled and pureed with potato to a soup-like consistency and provided a bold fuchsia color. This puree is piped in patty pan squash. Carrots that are finely sliced are employed as a garnish. The slices of carrots were previously frozen because Chef Pietzner stated that they came out having more of a vibrant color. Pate à choux is shaped into a flower like design and used as part of the garnish, making the dish more interesting by adding another accent to detail. The "Vegetable Symphony" was beautifully presented in a wine glass. The chef tipped the baby bell over to allow the puree spill out, which gave the dish a dramatic and avant-garde appeal. The four garnishes were creatively arranged on the plate. The red onion vinaigrette was placed carefully on the plate as a sauce. Chef Pietzner cooks seasonally and changes the vegetables accordingly.

One characteristic that Chef Pietzner has is that he is nutrition conscious. This quality is one thing that DVC's might have overlooked in the past. When asked by Anthony Ladson, "Where did your interest in nutrition with food stem from?" The chef replied, "It comes from my clientele. My customers challenge me to cook this way." Chef Pietzner then stated that from talking to his customers, he realizes that the majority of them know a lot about food and nutrition. Chef Pietzner uses small amounts of protein, an abundance of fresh herbs, and his portions are roughly about a third of the typical American diet. These details coincide with the research of nutrition today. He also said that because of their superior flavor, organic farming and free-range poultry and meats are popular throughout Germany.

The next course was a soup: Mustard Soup "Rôtisseur" Style with Cauliflower Puree and Rabbit Loin. This soup uses mustard spread and mustard seeds (which he roasted) to flavor the beef consommé, in addition, horseradish is used for a little extra spiciness. Chef Pietzner chose rabbit for his protein because it is very popular in Germany. He chose chervil as his fresh herb because it is light and would not overpower the delicate flavor of the rabbit. The rabbit tenderloin was covered with a chicken farce and covered with plastic wrap and foil to hold its shape during poaching. The loin was then shocked in cold water after poaching. This soup is Chef Pietzner's signature and he keeps it on the menu year round, however, changing the garnishes according to the season. The students were then given a sample of the soup. When the chef was asked, "Where do you get your creativity from?" He replied, "I use all my own recipes and I attend food shows, conventions, competitions, and I read a lot of books on top of going out to dine." The chef also stated that he collects old cook books, primarily from the 1900's, and that these books provide information on cooking using basic ingredients and techniques.

The next course was the main course: Duel of Artic Char with Walleyed Pike, Vanilla Infused Cucumbers and Marbled Potato Tart. He began this course by asking for a student volunteer, Ben Welch IV, to step in. Ben sautéed crawfish with wine and fresh herbs; the chef had 'chopped' them by hand. Bourbon was then added to flambé the crawfish. Chef Pietzner expertly sautéed deseeded cucumber slice with vanilla, which created a very unique and aromatic combination.

"Why have you been using butter and heavy cream in your cooking but you say you cook with nutrition in mind?" questioned by a challenging student, who was met with 'boo's' from the crowd. "Fat is important. I only use moderate amounts," replied the chef. Chef Pietzner utilizes recipes in his kitchen for consistency and portion control. He uses 5-1/2 ounces of protein as a standard for the main course. Another student volunteer, Jen Felmley, then rolled the pike with nori seaweed. Jen stated that she enjoyed the different combination of pike and nori.

The last course: Old Prussian Almond Paste Farina with Strawberries in Wine Jelly, Chocolate Delicacies, and Sea Buckthorn Compote. Sea buckthorn is the German equivalent to cranberries. The berries are high in vitamin C and in minerals. Although I have not looked for the berries in American markets, I have seen them used in personal care products for their high vitamin and mineral content.

The demonstration by Chef Pietzner was interesting, interactive, and very educational. The chef was very up-to-date with his cooking techniques and displayed a modern and classic food philosophy. When Ben Welch IV was asked about his experience, he stated, "It was an experience to be that close to greatness." Chef Pietzner ended the demonstration with a message for the students stating that Johnson & Wales is a wonderful school and that the students are very lucky to be here and to be able to work with such talent. He then was given a knife set by Dean Guggenmos in appreciation for his time and talents. The dishes were then displayed so the students could see them further detail.

less than spectacular, Jody Adams' undeniable enthusiasm and love for cooking embodies all that characterizes a role model in the foodservice industry.

Going With The Bottled Water Flow

Purified Water or Natural Spring Water? Are you drinking what you think you are drinking? What do you need to know before you buy your next bottle of water?

(NAPS) - When Americans tap into their thirst for water, they often buy it in a bottle. Americans are drinking bottled water in record numbers—a whopping five billion gallons in 2001, according to the International Bottled Water Association, an industry trade group. People are not only drinking more bottled water in record numbers, they are also spending significant amounts of their hard earned money for it.

That's why it pays to be sure you're getting what you think you're buying. The best thing to do is read the label. Many bottled water brands on the market today are sourced from either natural spring water or tap water that has been purified. There is a difference in the unique taste of natural water.

A recent survey showed that when making a decision to purchase bottled water, consumers said this distinction was not made clear to them. In fact, 61 percent of bottled water drinkers say that if they knew a particular brand of bottled water was bottled from purified tap water, they would be less inclined to buy it.

Consumers need to arm themselves with knowledge about what they're buying before they grab the next bottle of water off of the shelf. The FDA classifies bottled water according to its origin. For example, Artesian well water is bottled from a well that taps a confined aquifer in which the water level stands at some height above the top of the aquifer. Mineral water is water from an underground source that contains at least 250 parts per million total dissolved solids. Natural spring water is water that is derived from an underground formation from which water flows naturally to the earth's surface. Purified drinking water is water, typically from a municipal supply, that has been produced by distillation, deionization, and reverse osmosis or other suitable processes.

Among natural spring waters, the Poland Spring brand distinguishes itself by its naturally pure and crisp taste—the result of natural sources that lie deep beneath the protected pine forests in Maine. While Poland Spring is distributed only in the northeast, its long history and high quality have made it one of the most recognizable brands in America and number one in sales among natural spring water brands. Consumers can look for other regional brands, such as Arrowhead Mountain Spring Water in the west, Ozarka Natural Spring Water in Texas and Zephyrhills Natural Spring Water in Florida, just to name a few.

Finally, a word about taste. People don't usually attribute a taste to water, but like grapes grown in different regions, water from one area does taste different from water from another. Most natural spring water is bottled close to the region in which it is sole—it may say so right on the label. The unique taste profile of natural spring water is dependent upon the geology of the earth through which it travels. This is what makes natural spring water very different from purified water. A person's palate may become accustomed to the unique regional properties and taste of his or her favorite brands of spring water and distinguish the difference.

(NAPS)--The increasing availability of fresh herbs is changing the way Americans cook. Simply adding a small amount of herbs creates a tempting fragrance and delicious flavor that turns ordinary dishes into extraordinary ones.

"Incorporating fresh herbs into your recipes is a sure-fire way to engage all of your senses, while adding a thrilling dimension and sophistication to meals," says Jerry Traunfeld, James Bear award-winning chef and author of The Herbfarm Cookbook.

Traunfeld has partnered with Dairy Management Inc. (DMI), on behalf of the American Butter Institute to develop a delicious, herb-inspired recipe using fresh basil and simple ingredients like butter and cheese. "This recipe is just the thing for fun, spur of the moment cooking," says Traunfeld. "Basil plays beautifully off the richness of butter, and creates an irresistible aroma that will tempt any palate."

With such a distinct and appealing texture, these Buttery Basil Parmesan Puffs are a great addition to any meal.

Following are some ideas to keep in mind when preparing this recipe:

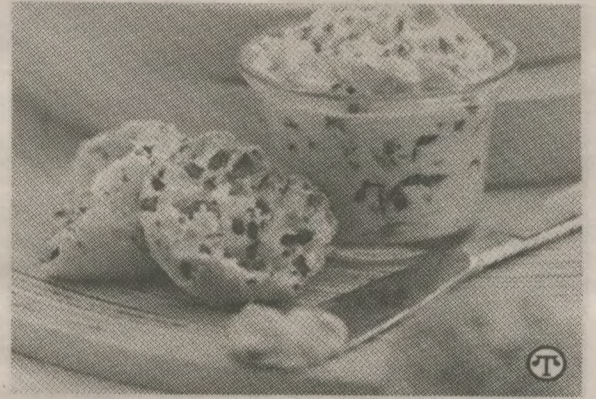

Keep it Fresh: Using fresh herbs can add more flavor than dried ones. Obtaining fresh basil can be as easy as picking it from your own garden, or buying some from the grocery store or local farmers' market.

Picture Perfect: To get round, airy puffs, place some of the dough in a plastic sandwich bag, seal it, and cut 1/4 inch off the bottom corner. Then squeeze out about 1 tablespoon of dough per puff.

Offer a Spread: Make a delicious butter spread, such as a sun-dried tomato butter, to complement the puffs. Combine 1 pound of butter, 1 cup of sun-dried tomatoes, 1/2 cup of pine nuts and 1 tablespoon of fresh garlic in a mixing bowl. Mix together, then salt and pepper to taste.

Plan Ahead: to prepare now and bake later, unbaked puffs can be refrigerated for up to six hours before baking, or frozen on cookie sheets and baked directly from the freezer. Allow an extra five minutes baking time for frozen puffs.

Unparalleled flavor is achieved when all natural butter is used to create great-tasting dishes. Visit www.butterisbest.com for an array of meal ideas for any occasion. Everything from appetizers to entrees is just a click away.

Buttery Basil Parmesan Puffs

Makes: 24

Prep Time: 20 minutes

Bake Time: 30 minutes

Recipe Provided by Jerry Traunfeld on behalf of the American Butter Institute

3/4 cup water
6 tablespoons (3/4 stick) unsalted butter, cut in cubes
3/4 teaspoon salt
3/4 cup all-purpose flour
1 1/2 cups basil leaves, gently packed
4 large eggs
1 cup freshly grated Parmesan

Finely chop basil leaves and set aside. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees. Bring water, butter and salt to a rolling boil in a medium-sized saucepan. When butter has melted, add flour, all at once, and whisk vigorously over medium heat until mixture forms a smooth thick dough that pulls away from sides of the pan. Transfer dough to the mixing bowl of a heavy-duty electric mixer.

Using the paddle attachment, beat mixture on medium until slightly cool. Add basil and mix until incorporated and dough is bright green. Add eggs, one at a time, to mixture and beat until smooth. Continue to mix for one minute. Add cheese and process until incorporated.

Line two cookie sheets with parchment paper. Drop dough in tablespoon sized balls on cookie sheets, allowing about 1 inch of space between each. Bake for 25 to 30 minutes or until lightly browned and crisp. Serve while still warm.

Message from the Junior Class

A warm welcome to all freshman and returning students

The Junior Class President of the Student Government Association would like to extend a warm welcome to all freshman and returning students at Johnson & Wales University. Best wishes to all of you in your endeavors, and to enjoy a safe and exciting journey throughout the year.

On October 1, 2002 the Student Government Elections were held. Ballots were prepared with the candidates who were interested in positions with Government. Thank you for voting in this election. It was the "deciding voice" of the student body, which helped completed our senate, and given us the opportunity to fulfill the duties and responsibilities, which belong to us.

The Junior Class Officers currently include the Class President Amberlee Rogers. An Advertising/Marketing Communications major at the university, Amber is dedicated to unite the Junior Class and bring about school spirit through an array of community service projects, fundraisers and special social activities planned throughout the year. No class meetings have been arranged at this time, but will be posted and all interested are welcome to attend.

If you are interested in becoming a part of Student Government Association and are a member of the Junior or Senior Class, please contact the SGA office at 598-1091 or stop by to speak with any current member of SGA. We are located downtown, at the CBCSI, first floor. There are currently two positions still available for the Junior Class (Junior Class Secretary and Treasurer). If you are interested in the Harborside's campus affairs, two positions as Harborside Affair's Senator's are also available.

Once again, enjoy all that Johnson & Wales has to offer you. Be that person you strive to be, make yourself proud, work hard, and never give up what is important to you. Make 02/03 the best year yet by filling it with your memories and success at Johnson & Wales University.

Elections Reception

Tuesday night October 1st was the day that all the candidates were looking for. Not only was that the day of the Student Government Election it was the night of the Election Reception. The University's Junior Class President Amber Rogers coordinated the special night for the senator and class officers to be. The program began at 7:45pm that evening with Pepsi Forum lined with chairs lined with patriotic balloons going down the center of the isle. The program began with a welcoming by the Director of Student Activities, Michelle Delaney, also advisor of the Student Government Association. She began her introduction by telling the candidates and their supporters that she looked forward to having this new addition to SGA. Michelle then introduced "the two that will lead the SGA this year" Student Body President Albert Hilliard and Crystal Lee Chapman Executive Vice President. They went on to announce the winners of the election held earlier that day and finished off by saying that they look forward to working everyone and to turn SGA into a real working government.

SHADOW MEMBERS

Shadow members, are the newest positions members of the student body can hold. The positions will be filled after the election for those that are still interested in being apart of SGA.

Upon taking the position shadow members will be placed with a current member of the Student Government.

Youth Join the MicroEnterprise Revolution

The Rhode Island MicroEnterprise Association, in partnership with community-based organizations located throughout the state, provides free microbusiness training and business technical assistance to persons wishing to start their own small business. Our services are accessible by the owners of more than 10,000 microbusinesses and home-based businesses in Rhode Island.

YOUTH JOIN THE MICROENTERPRISE REVOLUTION

Oprah, J Lo and P Diddy are all entrepreneurs. They know how to make building a business a part of their lives. Now two schools in Rhode Island are plugging into a program in "Entrepreneurship...The Basics" being taught by Ann Marie Marshall, director of the Rhode MicroEnterprise Association and Prof. Kenneth Proudfoot of Johnson & Wales University.

Youth entrepreneurship is included as part of the high school curriculum. Projects are in place in Introduction to Business classes at Shea High School in Pawtucket and at the Cranston Area Career & Technical Center in conjunction with culinary arts, financial and marketing students. Young artists are also getting the business basics at ASS220's Broad Street Studio.

R.I. MICROENTERPRISE DELEGATION SPENDS BUSINESS DAY IN D.C.

Rhode Island Business Day 2002 put federal officials and Congressional reps in front of advocates for microenterprise for a discussion of export trade, social security reform and funding for small business. Anne Marie Marshall attended R.I. Business Leaders Day forums hosted by Sen. Jack Reed (D-R.I.) for discussions over the course of the day with leaders who included Sen. Lincoln Chafee (R-R.I.), Sen.

Joseph Liberman (D-Ct.) Sen. John McCain (R-Az.), Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle (D-S.D.) and Alan Greenspan, chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve.

STUDENTS EXPLORE PATH TO LEADERSHIP AT YOUTH CAMP

Twelve R.I. high school students with disabilities took part in three days of events at Camp Conanus in Exeter, R.I. at the first annual Rhode Island Youth Leadership Forum. Students took part in educational programs on developing self-esteem, choosing a career, recognizing the history of disability as a culture, tapping into financial resources, using technology to promote independence and developing a leadership plan for success.

Help came from the MicroEnterprise Association and Johnson & Wales University students, Adam Anthony, Michelle Kulinkowski, Reather

Hollingsworth, and Ralph Balsamo assisted Anne Marie Marshall with activities. Funding for the leadership forum was contributed by the R.I. Department of Human Services, Ocean State Center for Independent Living and the U.S. Department of Labor, Office of Disability Employment Policy.

Credit Card Troubles

By: Anitra Merricks

No income, no credit, no problem. We all recognize the slogan either from television, billboards, or radio. Many companies are offering credit cards to any student over the age of 18. Is it a problem or a lesson of financial responsibility?

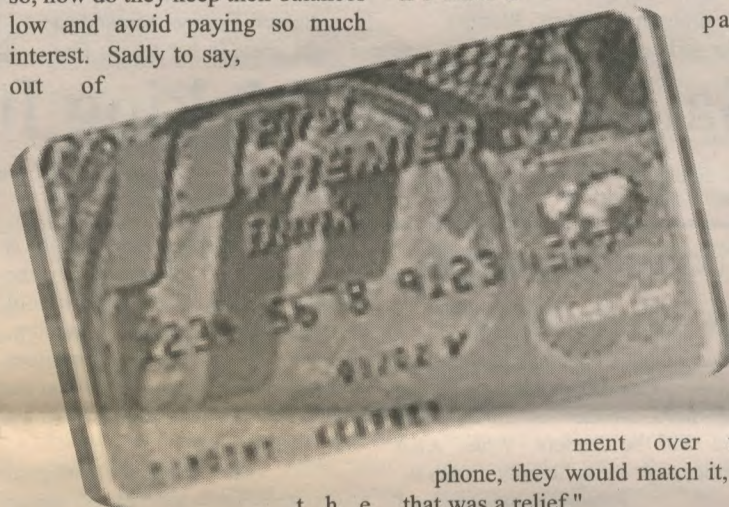

Interviewing several students about owning a credit card and realizing many seen it as a problem because they were either in debt or on their way to debt. Too often, students learn about the high cost of credit cards this way and the problem is consistent. Studies have shown that fifty-four percent of freshman students carry a credit card and by sophomore year, the number increases 92 percent. The reason for the ease of entry for students and credit cards is the credit card issuer's expectancy of the parents to bail their students out of debt and late payments because of the student's future endeavors.

An additional problem, is the student's lack of understanding interest rates, and how it affects their balance. Discover Card is a perfect example, their slogan, it pays to discover, or does it really. Discover card standard annual percentage rate (APR) is 17.99% and that's an introductory rate/special offer that is not fixed. If you were to make one late payment to APR jumps to 19.99% on the rest of your purchases and balance transfers. What a rip off.

In actuality, here's a calculation for you, you have a $700 balance at an APR of 19.99%, and you pay $50 a month, how long would it take to pay off this particular credit card, if you're not planning on purchasing any more items. 5 months... 6 months... 7 months... of course not, it will take a whopping 16 months to get rid of your debt. In that time, you will pay approximately $97.63 in interest.

The questions are how many students are in good standing with their credit card companies, and if so, how do they keep their balances low and avoid paying so much interest. Sadly to say, out of the first 10 students approached, only two of them were in good standing with their creditors. Jovanna Edwards, a senior, says, "I pay my credit card bill monthly, and not just the minimum payment due, I pay the minimum plus whatever money I have left over." Michael Forge, a junior, states "I used to be in debt but I called my credit card company and told them I would do my best to make a payment and they told me if I make a student the opportunity to have a good leap from college to the real world. When coming upon your first apartment, its either you have good credit with no deposit, or no credit with a big deposit before even considering moving in. In addition, forget about a new car, interest rates will eat you up, with no credit, what a hassle.

Nevertheless, in deciding to get a credit card, make sure you do all of the following. Keep track of your spending; a new pair of shoes is not an emergency. Pay your bill on time and if you do not have the money to pay the bill, STOP SPENDING. Avoid using credit cards for small purchases, such as soda and snacks. Who wants to pay interest on a bag of Cheetos? If there is ever a feeling of pressure because your limit is too high, call and request a limit reduction. They may not like it, but it is your choice, their not paying the bill.

ment over the phone, they would match it, so that was a relief."

Although, there are many consequences to students and credit cards, there are many advantages. Establishing credit, convenience, financial emergencies, and they are safer than cash, just to name a few. Establishing credit gives the

Quick & Dirty Computing 101

By: Kyle Ricks

All right boys and girls, you had one long day. Two tests, one quick lunch and two boring lectures later you walk into your room. You toss your things on the bed, and sigh a bit of relief. The crack of the drink's top in your hand hisses through the air as you take a long and comforting sip. You sit down at your computer and begin to do your thing, but here's the deal, for some reason, today it doesn't like you. So what do you do? Call 598-4357, the JWU Helpdesk.

WRONG! From here on out, check here first! That's right, folks, I am here to give you the low down in the digital world on how to fix some of these basic problems on your own. First off, a bit of a note to you all, the Help Desk deals with computers, not your personal life. "We do not know if you need to wear your culinary uniform to lab or where the presentation your teacher is having is at," stated Yolanda Lopez, member of the Helpdesk. So please keep your questions to them based on actual computer problems.

Now, for things like scanners, printers, digital cameras, etc, if the issue cannot be solved over the phone, then do not be surprised if you are referred to Team Computer. This means you will need to take it down to them or to call them. Another thing for you to do is check the website of the company that made it. Many of the companies have easy fixes on the Internet. The Helpdesk goes out to dorms on Fridays only to deal with networking issues, not personal computers.

Also, restarting your system has been known to fix some of these problems, as well as others. To do this in the middle of things, there are a few options. The first is NOT to physically beat your computer! You may want to, but explaining that kind of thing to mom and dad probably isn't the best way to greet them. Instead, either minimize the program by holding the ALT button and the TAB button and end it through the start bar or hold ALT, CTRL and hit the Delete buttons. This will bring up a little box of programs that are running. Select the program you want to exit and click on 'End Task'.

Now, let's say Billy has just gotten home and is hoping for an e-mail from Sally. He gets over to his machine and then thinks, "Wait...how do I access my e-mail?" Well, I have the steps, the 'low-down' if you will. When you open your Internet browser, there is a text bar at the top of the screen. Here you enter URL's, which in very basic speech is the address of the site. Unlike most sites, your JWU e-mail doesn't require "www" or anything else like that. Just type the following without the parentheses (email.jwu.edu) and that is all you need.

Now in closing, I hope I have been of help. Please, be kind to the Helpdesk and realize they want to help. Be patient and courteous, they have many people to help each day. Also, remember that computers are like everything else; sometimes they just don't work right. So take it easy, relax, and have a good time.

JWU Soccer Force Known As Serious Contenders

By: Dave Bloss
Sports Editor

Both the men's and women's soccer teams have served notice they will be serious contenders when the Great Northeast Athletic Conference playoffs begin in early November.

The men's team won its first three league matches before dropping a tough 2-1 overtime decision to Albertus Magnus College. The Wildcats had earlier disposed of GNAC rivals Emerson College (6-2), Western New England College (2-1) and Rivier College (2-0).

Senior Mark Scott scored 10 goals in the team's first 12 matches, highlighted by a three-goal performance during an 8-0 non-league romp at Framingham State. Fellow senior Steve Tenaglia, last year's top scorer, had three goals after 12 matches but had contributed eight assists. Three of sophomore Matt Ruzga's four early-season goals came in the win over Emerson. Senior goalkeeper Trevor Foden earned back-to-back shutout wins against Framingham State and Rivier College. Senior Seth Schoem has been a stalwart on defense.

The Wildcats play at Southern Vermont on Saturday, Oct. 19. They host Tufts on Tuesday, Oct. 22 at 7 pm and Daniel Webster College on Saturday, Oct. 26, at 1 pm. Home matches are played at Pierce Field in East Providence.

The Wildcat women won their first four GNAC matches as part of a six-match win streak. They defeated GNAC foes Rivier College (7-2), Daniel Webster College (5-1), Norwich University (2-0) and Simmons College (2-0). They also topped non-league rivals Framingham State (4-1) and Roger Williams University (2-1).

Senior Patrice Merendina scored eight goals in her team's first 12 matches, while teammate Jena Naffa added seven goals and freshman Jennifer Johnson from West Greenwich, RI, contributed three goals and three assists. Sophomore goalkeeper Steph Petrecchia missed three matches after suffering a leg injury in a collision in the final minute of a 3-0 loss to Rhode Island College. But she allowed only one goal in her first three matches after returning to the lineup, and was even credited with an assist when her booming goal kick set up a tally by Merendina in the final minutes of a 2-0 victory at Simmons College.

The Wildcats host Eastern Connecticut on Wednesday, October 16 at 7 pm at Pierce Field in East Providence. Their final home match is Tuesday, October 29, against Emerson College at 3:30 pm.

Sailing Team Making It Simple

By: Dave Bloss
Sports Editor

"Sailing is simple, its just not easy"

Coaches are always saying they need athletes on their teams who will be leaders. When Alan Penney says it, he literally means it.

Penney is the coach of the second-year Johnson & Wales sailing team. He is always on the lookout for skippers for his two-person sailboats. The team owns four 14-footers in the 420 Class, which were purchased from the Brown University sailing team. They practice in Narragansett Bay near the Edgewood Yacht Club started by students from Sweden. It was originally financed by the Goteborg Yacht Club. (The school has a branch campus in Goteborg, Sweden). "I don't even remember who said it first, but someone said we should start a varsity team, and so we did," Penney said.

Sailing originated at Johnson & Wales as a club sport

The Wildcats compete every weekend in the fall and spring against top New England teams including Brown, Yale, Massachusetts Maritime, Tufts, Salve Regina and Northeastern. Each school enters two boats in a regatta, which may include as many as 10 teams. Boat races eight times in a regatta on a triangular course that usually takes 10-18 minutes per race to complete unless the wind is calm. The team uses other school's boats when it travels to regattas so they don't have to use trailers to pull their own boats.

"The wind is free," Penney quipped when asked about costs for his sailors. He does recommend they buy their own wet suits. Student sailors must swim two lengths of an Olympic-size pool before they can compete on the open water.

Penney is a retired Coast Guard officer who works in the school's Admissions Office. He says he needs a couple more years of recruiting and training sailors before the team can become competitive with some of the more-established New England teams.

The current team has six returning students and eight freshmen. Sophomore Adam Davis had only sailed for recreation with his family before joining the team last year. Christian Kellgren, a Swedish student, has sailed in many areas of the world, but only on larger boats. Tom Grunbeck is an experienced wind surfer, but now has to learn that standing up isn't a good idea with a boom swinging back-and-forth near his head.

"Sailing is simple. It's just not easy," Penney tells his team. Building a program is also not easy but Penney is committed to finding students and teaching them to compete in the sport and enjoy it.

Cross Country Teams Set High Goals

By: Dave Bloss
Sports Editor

JWU cross country teams plan to prove their improvement with a cohesive unit of teammates

Men's cross-country coach Tom Spann and women's coach Hollie Walton have set a very precise goal for the 2002 fall season. Both teams finished third in the Great Northeast Athletic Conference race last year, and both coaches want to improve upon those results when the GNAC teams meet Nov. 2 at Rivier College.

"We want to prove we're better this year," Walton said. "We have a good crop of kids who work well together."

The most pleasant surprise of the season has been freshman Lori Boyce.

The Hopedale, MA, native finished third among 51 female runners at the Ray Dwyer Invitational held at Goddard Park in East Greenwich, and fourth among 54 female runners at the Tri-State Invitational held at the Community College of Rhode Island's Lincoln campus.

Junior Heather Pagano has joined Boyce in running a 5-kilometer course in under 20 minutes this season. Sophomore Jean Tinnelly is another key team member, according to Walton, while Sarah Bray, Andrea Stevens, Randi Grossman and Monique Nieves all achieved personal best times at the CCRI meet.

On the men's side, sophomore Jeff Barolini finished 17th out of 59 runners at the Ray Dwyer meet and 14th out of 78 runners at the CCRI meet. Freshman Brian Ludlam finished eighth in an early-season triangular meet with CCRI and Navy Prep. Fellow freshmen Brian Robeson and Darren Turnell have joined senior Dave Boehm as other top squad performers.

Walton says he hopes other student-runners will consider coming out for the cross-country team in future years. "We have young teams now, but we still could use more depth," Walton said.

Following the GNAC championships, the cross-country runners will compete in the East Coast Athletic Conference championships on Nov. 9 and the NCAA Northeast qualifying race on Nov. 16.

Men's Tennis Team In Search of New Players

The four-time Great Northeast Athletic Conference champion men's tennis team is always on the lookout for new players. Anyone interested in trying out for the team is encouraged to attend a meeting to be held Monday, Oct. 21 at 7 pm in Multi-purpose Room A in the Harborside Rec Center.

For more information, contact Aaron Carnegie at 917-756-4307 or Dr. Allan Freedman at 598-1021.

NBA Season Preview

TEAMS TO WATCH FOR IN EACH DIVISION

Atlantic Division

Washington Wizards

Most teams head into a new season with a roster that has either been kept intact, or has undergone a major overhaul. Remarkably, the Washington Wizards enter the 2002-03 season with a squad that has accomplished both.

The key components are still there for Washington, namely one Michael Jordan. While the 39-year-old Jordan (22.9 ppg, 5.7 rpg, 5.2 apg) has had to revamp his playing style -- now relying on jump shots and pump fakes instead of dunks and drives -- he is still highly effective. The Wizards were 30-30 (.500) with Jordan in the lineup, and just 7-15 (.318) without him, so his importance to the club can not be overstated.

But entering the new season, Jordan may no longer be the most important player on the team. By trading for ex-Piston Jerry Stackhouse (21.4 ppg, 4.1 rpg, 5.3 apg), Washington now has a player who can take over games in any number of ways: scoring, passing, playing defense, or exploiting his athleticism. Instituting a system that plays to both players' strengths will be vital for coach Doug Collins.

While Stackhouse joins newcomers Larry Hughes and Bryon Russell to bolster an already strong perimeter game, the inside game remains largely the same for Washington. Brendan Haywood, Christian Laettner, Etan Thomas and Jahidi White will rotate between the four and five spots to provide interior defense and rebounding. These players are more steady than spectacular, however. Following a disappointing rookie season, the pressure will be on Kwame Brown to step up down low. If Brown doesn't deliver, then rookie Jared Jeffries could get a chance.

Regardless of what happens with the youngsters, Stackhouse and Jordan should provide enough scoring and leadership for the Wizards to make a playoff run this season.

New Jersey Nets

It's going to be tough for New Jersey to improve upon their impressive 2001-02 campaign. MVP candidate Jason Kidd and the Nets shocked everyone by: winning 50-plus games, capturing their first-ever Atlantic Division title, and then reaching the NBA Finals. For a franchise long unaccustomed to post-season success, you can't ask for much more than that.

But thanks to some shrewd offseason moves by GM Rod Thorn, the 2002-03 Nets should be even better. Despite their achievements, the uptempo Nets had a few weaknesses last season: soft interior defense, streaky bench scoring, and lack of a solid backup point guard. Thorn brought in Dikembe Mutombo, Rodney Rogers, and Chris Childs, respectively, to specifically address these three points.

The rest of the team should be improved, as well. Youngsters Richard Jefferson (9.4 ppg) and Kenyon Martin (14.9 ppg, 1.66 bpg) give New Jersey one of the most athletic forward tandems in the league. Shooting guard Kerry Kittles (13.4 ppg, .405 3FG%) made a sparkling return from injury last season. And the do-it-all Kidd (14.7 ppg, 7.3 rpg, 9.9 apg) appears set to build upon an incredible season in which he led one of the most impressive turnarounds in recent NBA history.

To be sure, there are questions facing New Jersey beyond this season. They gave up quite a bit to get Mutombo. Will this prove to be a trade of diminishing returns? And will they be able to keep free agent-to-be Kidd past this season? Or will he pack up and leave after 2002-03?

But Thorn and coach Byron Scott decided to make a run at the title now. While there are questions to be faced after this coming season, New Jersey seems to have all the answers in place for 2002-03.

Central Division

Cleveland Cavaliers

Cavs general manager Jim Paxson had a summer that would make a Marine drill sergeant proud. Paxson broke down the Cavs by moving a platoon of players out of town with intent to build them back up with nine new recruits.

He sent Andre Miller, the league's assist leader, to the Clippers, Wesley Person, the Cavs' third leading scorer, to Memphis and Lamond Murray, the team's leading scorer, to Toronto.

After trading Murray, Paxson told The Plain Dealer: "Lamond goes to a team that's closer to winning and that's what he wanted, and we cleared the deck for our young guys. For the direction we wanted to go, winning a few more games with veterans isn't the answer in the short term. I'm looking at the big picture."

The big picture for Cavs fans, at least this season, does not include many wins. With nine unfamiliar faces, including Darius Miles and rookie Dajuan Wagner, the No. 6 pick in this year's NBA Draft, it will take more than a month of training camp for them to get accustomed to each other. That, and the Cavs are one of the most inexperienced teams in the league. Cleveland's main offensive option, Ricky Davis, has started 13 games in his four seasons.

And if they could stay healthy, the Cavs have potentially one of the better frontcourts in the East. Zydrunas Ilgauskas is one of the more talented centers in the league, but has played in only 91 games in the last three seasons and Tyrone Hill is still one of the top rebounding power forwards in the East, but missed 56 games. Notoriously cranky, it will be interesting to see how Hill handles the Cavs' youth movement, because if the Cavs progress slowly, it may be a long season for players and fans alike.

Chicago Bulls

One, they have plenty of youth with six players who are 22 years old or younger. And two, this year's No. 2 overall draft pick, Jay Williams, is the reason, and source, of that optimism.

"We're going to win a lot more games than people think," Williams told the Chicago Tribune. "I hear about 25 wins, 30 wins. But a lot has to do with a team's determination. The best team doesn't always win the game. It's the team that is the hungriest, the team that does the little things, works hard. We have guys like that. We may surprise some people."

Williams knows of what he speaks. In his three years at Duke, the Blue Devils went 95-13 and won an NCAA title in 2001. Yet another reason for the optimism is Jalen Rose. Rose, who was acquired from the Pacers in the middle of last season and went to the 2000 NBA Finals with Indiana, should provide veteran leadership and will be the first offensive option. Rose averaged 23.8 points in games for Chicago last season.

Still, many of the Bulls will continue to learn on the job. Second year post players Eddy Curry and Tyson Chandler had their moments, both good and bad, last season. Power forward Marcus Fizer had his best season and was the only other Bull to average in double figures with 12.3 points per game.

It will be a surprise if the Bulls win more than 30 games because they are so young, including at point guard where Williams and Jamal Crawford will share time. There's also the question of whether Williams can handle the 82-game NBA grind.

Midwest Division

Houston Rockets

The biggest thing to hit the city of Houston in years, is well, quite big. Seven-foot-five Chinese center Yao Ming joins a team that already may have the best backcourt tandem in the West, as well as a core of talented, young forwards. Things -- as well as teammates -- are looking up in Houston.

So, with all of this talent, why didn't the Rockets fare better last season? The injury bug hit the Rockets hard last year, with Maurice Taylor going down before the season even started, Glen Rice playing in only 20 games, and Steve Francis sidelined for 25 games with migraine headaches. This meant the Rockets suffered through their worst season in almost 20 years. But injuries heal, and spring brought new hope in the arrival of Yao, the first overall selection in the 2002 NBA Draft. Not expected to sign a contract until mid-October, Yao will be brought along slowly but will contribute.

Besides the stellar play of Francis, the other bright spot for the Rockets was the play of Cuttino Mobley. Stepping into the starting lineup, Mobley led the Rockets in scoring, becoming the most consistent option on a team with an ever-changing starting lineup. Mobley is ready to step back into that same spot on the court.

"Injuries killed us last year. This year, there should be no excuses. I'm excited about (Yao). Steve's healthy. Mo Taylor looks great. I'm like a little kid, I'm so happy to be able to play," Mobley recently told the Houston Chronicle.

With more options up front, Francis and Mobley won't have to force as many shots as they did last season, which lead to an abysmal 42.8 team field-goal percentage. The Rockets also need to play better on-the-ball defense. They caused only 12 turnovers per game last year, worst in the league.

But with a headache-free Steve Francis, a healthy Maurice Taylor and contributions from late-blooming rookie Eddie Griffin, the Rockets will contend for a playoff spot even if Yao Ming takes some time to get adjusted to the NBA game, as is expected.

Pacific Division

Los Angeles Lakers

Is there any reason this team shouldn't win its fourth straight title? In pushing the Lakers to overtime of Game 7 in last year's Western Conference Finals, the Sacramento Kings proved this: You have to play perfect basketball to beat L.A. And doing it in a seven-game playoff series is a virtual impossibility. Yes, there were grumblings about officiating after Game 6, but the facts were that the Kings had more depth offensively, playoff experience, the NBA's best regular-season record and home-court advantage ... and the Lakers won anyway. The NBA Finals were merely a formality as L.A. swept the New Jersey Nets.

The bad news for the rest of the league is that the Lakers have maintained status quo, re-signing their major free agents and adding more role players with summer transactions. But it's not as though there's any secret to their success; the Lakers have won and will continue to win with their superstars. There's Shaq. There's Kobe. Try and stop them.

Shaquille O'Neal will likely miss a few early games after undergoing toe surgery in September, but should then be free of the soreness that plagued him all last year. The conundrum he creates for the opposition is simple: He gets whatever he wants. O'Neal has ranked among the league's top three in scoring for five consecutive seasons. Last year, his 27.2 points per game ranked second behind Allen Iverson's 31.4, and his .579 field-goal percentage led the NBA by a large margin. (The Clippers' Elton Brand was next at .527). Of course, most overmatched defenders just grab and swat in order to put O'Neal and his much-maligned free-throw percentage on the line; Shaq missed 15 games in 2001-02 and still led the league in foul shot attempts with 717, sinking 398 (.555).

But as the stock cliché goes for the Lakers, pick your poison, because Kobe Bryant will hurt you too. While Bryant is celebrated for his athleticism, his ability to create his own shot, his adeptness at getting to the basket and his showmanship, he has really rounded out his game as he's matured. Last season, he was one of only two players in the league (along with Tracy McGrady) to average better than 25 points, five rebounds and five assists (25.2 ppg, 5.5 rpg, 5.5 apg) and was the only non-point guard among the NBA's top 20 in assists. For his efforts, Bryant was named to both the All-NBA First Team and NBA All-Defensive Second Team.

The remaining lineup stays intact as well: Solid veterans Derek Fisher, Rick Fox and Robert Horry, able defenders and perimeter players off the bench and an all-time great coach. It all adds up to four.

Sacramento Kings

The one team that legitimately challenged the Lakers last season didn't lose one player over the summer, re-signing prize free agent point guard Mike Bibby and actually adding to its already-enviable depth with the free agent pickup of Keon Clark, a wiry, 6-11 shotblocker and rebounder who will back up both Chris Webber and Vlade Divac.

Besides the addition of Clark, Sacramento's rotation remains intact. Led by All-Stars Webber and Peja Stojakovic, the Kings ranked second in the league to Dallas in scoring last season -- posting 104.6 points a game -- while improving the defensive play that had long been their weakness.

If the inside-outside threat of Webber (24.5 ppg, 10.1 rpg) and Stojakovic (21.2 ppg, 4.16 3P%) wasn't an overwhelming enough assignment for the opposition, the Kings had plenty more firepower from everywhere on the floor. Bibby averaged 13.7 points on .453 shooting during the regular season, then exploded in the playoffs, scoring 20.3 points per game and knocking down big shots in clutch situations. As a result, he'll be expected to take on more of a leadership role this year.

Doug Christie, who ranked fifth in the league in steals (1.98 spg) and was a member of the NBA All-Defensive Second Team, continued to contribute on offense as well; he averaged 12.0 points while shooting a career-high .460 from the field. Divac (11.1 ppg), Bobby Jackson (11.1 ppg) and Hedo Turkoglu (10.1 ppg) rounded out the only team in the league to have seven players average double-figures in scoring.

After winning 61 regular-season games in 2001-02, the Kings will be hard-pressed to make improvements. This is a team that could very easily have played for the championship if not for 14 missed free throws in Game 7 of the Western Conference Finals. Certainly they'll be at the top of the conference once again, and should they face the Lakers again in the postseason, their experience against the champs will only be helpful.

Security

How Safe are we? Students at Johnson & Wales University are in concern for their general safety due to Providence being one of the most crime infested cities in New England

181 reports of propped-open doors in Jeanne's dormitory in the four months prior to the murder." Jeanne's parents turned to the courts. In 1987 they began a spree of enacting laws requiring Colleges and Universities nationwide to make available, to current and prospective students, complete information about violent campus crimes and drug and alcohol offenses. They are also required to provide information about security procedures already in effect. Johnson & Wales University successfully follows the Jeanne Cleary Laws, and laws similar to them by keeping a record of their crime statistics available at the Admissions Office and/or Safety and Security office. They can also be viewed online at www.ope.ed.gov/security. There is also an annual security report which can be viewed by visiting the Johnson & Wales website.

As reported on The Office of Post Secondary Educations website, Johnson & Wales made 57 on-campus arrests to drug-law violations from 1999 to 2000. There were 243 liquor law disciplinary actions made from 1999-2000. Bryant College had similar statistics. Bryant College made 61 on-campus arrests to drug-law violations from 1999 to 2000. However, Bryant College made a significant amount of liquor law disciplinary actions, 725 over the course of 1999-2000. At Johnson & Wales there were 18 forcible sex offenses, from 1998 to 2000, 14 of those happening inside of residence halls. All of these statistics are open to the public, and published on The Office of Post Secondary Educations website. Safety and Security here at Johnson & Wales have a job of ensuring safety. Whether it is a resident assistant, a freshman, a senior, a professor, an administrator or bus driver, they have a crucial, vital job to protect that person. Is it fair to say your life is in their hands? Would you put your life in their hands?

Dan Higgins, a sophomore states, "I think safety and security does a fantastic job, I know many of the officers. I know many of them would do anything for the students on campus. Safety and Security is always available if a student has a problem. However, sometimes when you call for a ride to another part of the campus they say they will be there and sometimes they do not show. It is sometimes hard to get to every student. If it is an urgent matter they have to get to them first. That's something they should look into, but a lot of students do not understand they have to take their serious matters first."

On the contrary side of the discussion, Christopher Worcester who is also a sophomore states, "I think that the Safety & Security have improved their operations since my first year, but I feel that they need to do a lot more work to instill the feeling of safety on the campus. They need to move their office closer to the downtown campus and allow for students to be able to make formal complaints and take action with The Student Government Association against the Safety & Security officers that don't do their jobs."

Providing a stable source of transportation around campus could be the determining factor in a crime situation. The Providence campus is not an enclosed campus. There are two separate campus's miles apart. Dormitories are several blocks away from one another. As stated earlier there are about 40 to 50 security officers on campus. There are approximately 9,000 students. With this also comes a budget that Safety & Security must work with. All of these factors make it difficult to properly ensure campus safety.

Chris Worcester exclaims, "I find it disturbing that many times, friends of mine will call the office to get a ride to the hospital, or to another part of campus after dark and they will feel safer to ride, rather than walk. The Safety & Security officers may never show up and most often, they will show up very late. If they may say that they have more important things to do and have reports of "crime" that they have to go to the scene and can't help with anything else, I think that shows the Safety office needs to start a student volunteer program that students can help take reports, answer phones, and do non important duties, that will free up an officers time." Amber Rogers, Junior Class President for The Student Government was recently asked if she felt safe on campus. "Absolutely not, when on the Downtown Providence/Business campus there is not a moment when I feel fully safe and secure. Not during the day, not with a group. Not ever. There have been way too many occurrences of unfortunate incidents that have put me in this position, and created the fears I have. The crime alerts posted on these incidents comes way too often, for me to feel safe." claims Amber.

Amber believes safety is a matter of urgency, she goes on to further say, "As a Junior Class Representative for The Student Government Association it is important for me to be a voice for the student body and to work with other senators of student government, downtown campus affairs, and student services toward making our campus safer this year and in the future. The Safety and Security team seems to be doing the best job that they can right now."

Michelle Delaney, the Director of Student Activities, believes Safety and Security is a department with high visibility and so their mistakes are magnified much more than other departments. Michelle states, "Overall I feel that Safety and Security does a good job.

Are We Safe?

Richmond Street, 7:45pm October 10, 2002. A common place of campus crime.

I think there are many more demands placed on them as a department than the average person is aware of. There is always room for improvement and I'm certain that departmentally they have a plan to address change and improvements. I feel every department on campus should feel a sense of urgency to make improvements."

After September 11th United States residents realized anything can happen, anytime of the day, at any place. It is crucial to take every precaution available while attempting to complete even a simple task. Rudy Giuliani, the former mayor of New York City once said, "No mayor, no governor, no president can offer anyone perfect security. You've got to be able to deal with a certain level of risk in anything that you do. It exists and what we're doing is everything we reasonably can do to reduce that risk. Risk cannot be eliminated, but take security seriously."

With that said, take to the streets and walk proudly. If we fail to do that, then crime has conquered our spirits. Remember Johnson & Wales, the greatest risk is not taking one.

The Safety and Security office is in the process of undergoing improvements. The office is open 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. Students who need help or have questions should call 598-1103.
