Relay For Life Photo Recap

SGA Elections

The event began with a nice variety of food and refreshments followed by most of the SGA member’s arrival. The votes, which were taken on the Internet, were tallied and the winners had been chosen. Scott Lyons Director of Student Activities, followed by Jonathan Justimiano, executive member of SGA, introduced the event. Melissa Blanchard President of SGA read the results aloud “is there a specific order I should go in? No! Ok You all won.” Yes that’s right, there were enough positions for everyone and they all reached the necessary amount of votes. The new members of SGA admitted it was tough to get people to vote. With only 374 students that voted, the candidates stated many people said they did not want to “waste their time” or just claimed, “I don’t vote.” Also the voting, which was held online, was said to be confusing and unable to access from a smart phone. The election board did however set up tables with laptops so you could cast your votes with assistance. A new voting system was also said to be in play for next time. When asked how the new members advertised themselves many said social media such as Facebook and emails. Many others also reverted print campaigns, with flyers and stickers, or just speaking up in class. The election board even gave away fortune cookies. Nathan Barid, the new president of SGA said, “I look forward to the future elections and have big plans for the organization. With Special Elections May 10th to May 11th, there is still more spots available as of not all positions were filled, as well as another Election in the spring. There are currently four executive board positions open and 12 senator positions available. Applications for Special Elections are available now and are due by April 21st at 7:00 pm, at CBCS or HRC. Congratulations to Nathan Barid, Zachary Ranes, Emily Feinstein, Emily Greigiot, Nate Knepper, Natalie Longchamp, Christopher Duprey, Bethany Stanton, and Chelsea Wask.

CRIME PREVENTION TIPS:

With the warmer weather approaching, remember to secure your vehicle. Roll up windows and lock the doors.

Remember to remove small items of value from view.

Secure small personal items out of sight before leaving your vehicle.

Don't go it alone. For a Safe Walk escort on the downcity campus, call 598-1103.

When outside in the harborside campus near the water be on the alert for coyotes. Information about coyotes is available from the RI Department of Environmental Management (www.dem.ri.gov/topics).

According to State of RI DEM, coyote attacks on humans are very rare, however, these wild animals should not be approached.

The water's edge along the upper Narragansett Bay is a natural habitat for these wild animals.

If you have any further information regarding these incidents, please contact the Crime Prevention Unit. All calls are confidential.

ASSAULT WITH A KNIFE & ABDUCTION

On Saturday April 2, 2011 at 7:12 AM, the Providence Police alerted Safety & Security to an ongoing investigation of a reported assault and abduction at the Regency Plaza located on Washington Street, which occurred during the previous few hours. According to the police, two masked subjects entered an apartment occupied by two Johnson & Wales students and assaulted them at knifepoint. One female student was bound and secured in a bathroom, and the other male student was abducted from the building. The male student was taken away in his own vehicle and later released by his captors in the City of Malden, Massachusetts. His vehicle has not been recovered. Both students were treated for injuries incurred during this incident.

Federal and local law enforcement agencies continue to investigate this incident.

Crime Prevention Tips:

Immediately report suspicious persons or circumstances to police or campus safety & security. Lock doors and windows of your residence even when you are at home. Use careful judgment when lending personal items such as keys and vehicles.

A Fiery Novel in Buford’s “Heat”

DANIEL KLEIN
STAFF WRITER

“It’s like have the most amazing hard on, with Vagia sprinkled on top of it, and it’s still there twelve hours later.”

This was a quote by Gordon Ramsey from the book, “Heat: An Amateur’s Adventures as a Kitchen Slave,” by Bill Buford. The “It” that Ramsey was speaking of was the rush of a hard night on the line in a kitchen, something Buford would soon learn about and eventually experience himself.

Written in 2006 by Bill Buford, Heat showcases the ventures of Buford, a former fiction editor and staff writer for The New Yorker, as he sets out to learn what it means to be a decent home cook. Buford would help make it a real world of culinary arts.

The book is mostly a first person account of what Buford experienced while working in Mario Batali’s New York City restaurant, Babbo, and transitions into his decision to travel overseas and to Italy to study the art of Tuscan butchery. Overall though, this book is a multi-faceted piece as it is a mix of a memoir, tutorial, biography, and insight guide to the culinary industry.

When I received Heat during my senior year of high school, it was supposed to be our required reading in my advanced culinary class, but back then I never really wanted to read much. Years later, I decided to dust it off and actually sit down and read it. To read about Buford’s experiences, mainly his misconceptions and mistakes made in the kitchen, m a de this book almost a comedy for me, as I could so easily relate. The yelling and screaming, and “organized chaos” in a kitchen. How he couldn’t do numerous things, including the basics like cutting an onion, potato or carrot. The conflicts that occurred in the kitchen of Babbo, such as who makes what decisions and gets to put their things in a certain spot in the walk-in.

Though parts of the beginning of this book highlight and almost novelise the life of one Mario Batali, it can be realized a little more than halfway through the book that the parts on the fiery redheaded chef are included. Buford’s description of Batali’s unsettling and seemingly disgusting habit of digging through the trash to see what “waste” was being created by the staff, things such as lamb kidneys, celery leaves, green garlic stems and more, and then wanting, no, demanding that the cooks explain as to why they did not serve the “precious commodities” as an exercise in Italian fragility.

Even though the book show the ups and downs of Mario Batali and his restaurant, Buford never lost sight of Batali in the book as he set out to understand him. After finally finishing up at Batali’s restaurant, the 2nd part of the book begins with Buford traveling people from Batali’s past. From meeting his grandmother, Leonetta Merlino, and her ravioli recipe, to dining with Marco Pierre White and so much more.

The most crucial piece to this story is the 3rd part of the book, when Buford travels to the “podsunk towns of Perterina, Italy”. Buford examines historical cookbooks, meeting and learning from Batali’s pasta mentor, and eventually going to meet Dario Cecchina, owner of a Tuscan butcher shop, whom Buford would study under.

We all find ways to learn, be inspired, and find a passion for something we enjoy in our lives. In Buford’s book, he shows this and it is seen how he changed from wannabe cook who thinks they know their way around a kitchen to someone who actually does and can.

Spring is in the Kitchen Air

DANIEL KLEIN

“April showers bring May flowers.”

After being on internship last trimester with an herb company up in Boston, I realized this isn’t always true as flowers can be grown all year long (like in Colombia, Florida and California). However, for us here in New England, the saying still seems to apply. One thing I noticed is that I usually think of fresh herbs and flower in the spring and summer times, as that light, freshness they bring to many dishes.

I thought it would be interesting to highlight something that makes it feel like the seasons are finally changing. All the other great herbs aside, one thing I wanted to focus on are edible flowers. Something sometimes only seen in fancy restaurants, edible flowers can be something that will liven up any dish while adding subtle flavor and tons of color. One in particular, which I think are a lovely adornment to many things are edible orchids.

Originally thought of as an ornamental plant, Orchids are actually a tasty and health beneficial Hawaiian flower. A good source of vitamin C and natural fiber, Orchids are a simple and elegant way to add beautiful color, flavor, and texture to your favorite recipes.

These flowers can be used whole or simply pull apart the petals and toss into your favorite salad or chop them and fold them into mayonnaise for a tasty sandwich spread. They can also be used to garnish a dish, chopped and stirred into rice, mixed into stir-fry, as part of a table setting, or even used to decorate cakes and pastries with a delicate and sophisticated touch.

Orchids, which can be purchased in a couple of stores in the Providence area, need to be edible (usually come in a small clamshell labeled as garnish flowers) and not as a bouquet or on the stem. Fresh flowers sometimes have pesticides or other chemicals used in them, which are not good for the human body. Companies tend to make them in a small clamshell and have 5-7 in a package.

Overall, they are a fun and festive way to add color to almost any dish as well as the spring-y feeling. To welcome in the season, try my simple and easy Flower & Herb Salad recipe, as well as any other ways you feel would be creative to use orchids.

Black Swan Review
NIALE MCFERRSON STAFF WRITER

I did not know what to expect as a film about ballet did not appeal to me, however being directed by Darren Aronofsky (the wrestler in 2008) this seems worth watching. The movie takes place in New York City where Nina Sayers (Natalie Portman) is a dancer trying to become the Swan Queen after Beth Macintyre (Winona Ryder) leaves the production of Swan Lake. Nina still lives with her mother a former dancer. After casting Thomas Leroy (Vincent Cassel) the director chooses Nina for the role of the white swan but doubts she can play the black swan as she lacks something, which Lily (Mila Kunis) has.

During the course of the movie Nina tries to become the black swan in order to get the part but things begin to happen to her including Visual Hallucinations and strange symptoms, some of which lead her to believe Lily is trying to take her spot in the swan queen. This movie could not be classed into one genre as it contains elements of romance, thriller, and horror. The movie is really shocking and scary. Saying this makes be known that some are not going to like this movie. But I really enjoyed it in a different way as it has characters you really cared about what was going to happen to them, and a great storyline, which kept you watching despite some disturbing stuff. I would really recommend this movie but I understand it’s not for everyone.

Sucker Punch Review
NIALE MCFERRSON STAFF WRITER

"You will be unprepared" is the tagline for Zack Snyder’s 5th feature movie following successes with 300 and watchmen. The plot line follows Baby Doll (Emily Browning) who is abused by her stepfather, after attacking him and going insane in her stepfather opinion due to her mother death, she is taken to a Vermont mental institution. Here Baby Doll is held by blue Jones (Oscar Isaac) the director of the institution. While in the institution she becomes friends with other girls Sweet Pea (Abbie Cornish), Rocket (Jena Malone), Amber (Jaime Chung) and Blondie (Vanessa Hudgens) together they form a plan to escape from the institution. This takes them to different worlds including World War 2 and a city of the future.

During production the movie had several changes such as being cut in order to obtain a PG-13 rating rather than most of Snyder’s other movies, which were rated R, also despite plans for a 3D version they were dismissed. However these changes didn’t effect the production. As it is ever used in films at the moment and this does not need it. This movie does lack some scenes to it. But the worlds; which Snyder has created, look great, the characters you care about and can relate to them in some way. It also has a great movie soundtrack, which is unusual. Despite small problems, overall sucker punch is maybe Snyder’s best film to date if not a close second behind 300.

Unstoppable Review
NIALE MCFERRSON STAFF WRITER

1,000,000 tons of train is on the run, who can stop it? That is the problem facing AWVR Railroad Company when a train with no one on board to drive it loses control and is heading at speeds on 75 mph towards a large Pennsylvania town. New recruit Will Colson (Chris pine) starts his first day working for the AWVR alongside railroad alongside veteran Frank Barnes (Denzel Washington) as they get to know each other’s life’s, will says he is having problems at home with his wife and that Frank only has 90 days left with the rail company. But when they become aware of the runaway train and the damage it could cause, they put a plan in place to prevent the train from crashing and causing a large number of deaths.

With Tony Scott working with Denzel Washington again after deja vu and the taking of Pelham 123, I expected another good movie. Unfortunately this is not a good as either of their earlier movies. The plot is simple and because of that you don’t get any shocks or wondering what will happen next. Also it was not for the star cast and special effects this could have been a TV movie. Good points are, there is some action scenes which you somewhat care about what the character is thinking. Overall unstoppable is fun to watch but forgettable.

The Lincoln Lawyer Review
NIALE MCFERRSON STAFF WRITER

Based on the novel of the same name by Michael Connelly. Matthew McConaughey plays Mickey Haller the lawyer of the title. Haller is a Los Angeles lawyer who for the most part represents clients who have committed serious crimes. But because of being good at his job he can better than sentence or let them walk free. After getting arrested for assaulting and raping a woman he met at a club Louis Roulet (Ryan Phillippe) asks Haller to be his lawyer in his case. He explains to Haller that he was framed and was set up by the women, but as Haller looks further into the case things don’t add up, in addition to this he still has to deal with his other clients and reform a relationship with his ex-wife Maggie McPherson (Marsa Tomei).

In the beginning of the movie you think this is just another lawyer movie with a predictable story. But after a while you become really interested as to where the story’s going next and what the end result will be. Matthew McConaughey who seems to do the same bad acting in most of his movies. Is surprisingly very good in this as you can truly believe him as Mickey Haller, also the supporting cast including Phillippe is as good as great in his role. Overall The Lincoln Lawyer grips you from start to finish, and will keep you thinking the entire time.

Nintendo 3DS

Laura Sarkissian
Staff Writer

Nintendo has been considered the king of portable gaming since the days of the GameBoy. The Nintendo DS line, known for its unique two screen design and touch capabilities, has sold nearly 145 million units worldwide (not including pre-owned purchases). However, with new gadgets such as Apple’s iPad and the growing popularity for apps, and the upcoming release of Sony’s Xperia Play (more commonly known as the PlayStation Phone) a need to innovate arose, and so the 3DS was born. When first announced, Nintendo stated that its main objective would be to create a 3D effect on-screen that would not require special glasses with the goal to make the games more immersive. However, the technologies to allow for this work have bumpy price up to $249.99 USD, which is a pretty hefty price to pay for a hand-held device. Because I am a college student making minimum wage, I am naturally broke and can’t afford to put that much money down at once, but one of my friends was kind enough to let me borrow his 3DS for a day in order to test it out.

The size and structure are very similar to that of the DSi (3rd generation DS) with a few exceptions. The top screen is wider than the bottom-touch screen, which now has a border featuring a Wii-like home button and differently styled start and select buttons. The d-pad has been bumped downward, and on top of it is now a thumb-pad that works the same as a joy-stick. The microphone is more hidden, which actually seems more natural than when it was being pointed out. The open-side camera is now on top of the device rather than in the center. Obviously upgrades have also been made internally, such as the internal 2 GB of storage as opposed to the last DS model’s 256 MB (it should be noted that some games save on their own cartridges, and this storage would be for small downloads, pictures, etc.). With all of these upgrades comes a downside however, as the battery life has been significantly dropped. The final model of the DS had a battery life between around 5 and 17 hours depending on several settings, while the 3DS only lasts between 3 and 5 (or 3 and 6 if you are playing a previously released game). In order to make the battery last a little longer, there is now a switch to turn your wifi on or off (which is a good idea) and a switch to change the “intensity” of the 3D between full, medium, and off (which seems a bit odd to me; if you’re spending about $100 extra for 3D, Nintendo should try to make you want it), which doesn’t create a drastic interruption but does help. Feature-wise, it boasts most of the applications that the DS had and more, with the returning apps tweaked with new twists. Included with the 3DS for example is a camera game application called Augmented Reality, in which you place a certain card in front of the camera which will then transform on screen and activate a mini-game. This is similar to several apps on smartphone’s, but with the gaming abilities of the 3DS development of this feature could have a lot of potential.

The 3D itself is actually not too shabby, and I feel like it added something to the experience of playing a game rather than just being an expensive gimmick. This is done by having multiple projections of certain objects at slightly differing locations and angles, tricking the eye into believing there is actual depth. It’s not without its problems though, with the biggest complaint being eyestrain and headaches caused by staring at the 3D for long periods of time. Another is that because the screen is flat, one must find the proper spot and angle to hold the device in relation to their body in order to get the full effect. For myself, I believe about 5 minutes into the game was when I found this spot, but I have heard that some people weren’t able to find it until several hours have passed. I also noticed that if you move too much, it becomes difficult to see anything (as the effect creates a blur), but this shouldn’t be a problem for too many people.

But the biggest problem for many people has nothing to do with the 3D at all. At the big reveal for the 3DS, Nintendo displayed around 30 games that were to be available at launch. Many of these games are now not coming out for several months (with some not even listed as having a release date), and like many consoles, the at-launch titles have been received with general disappointment. Of the ones that were released, the top contenders appear to be Super Street Fighter IV 3D Edition (which is a port of the console versions), Pilotwings Resort (which is like Wii Sports Resort with flight-based games), and Lego Star Wars III: The Clone Wars 3D (which is mainly for Star Wars fans and younger audiences). While these games aren’t particularly bad, they aren’t exactly extraordinary, and a lot of Nintendo’s core audience is holding off from buying the system until more distinct titles are available. It’s not also very good in terms of the target audience, which appears to be between late teens and younger adults judging from the various advertisements and marketing strategy, who for the most part seem to be ignoring a majority of the launch titles which are obviously aimed towards younger demographics.

While the 3DS has achieved the goal for innovation that Nintendo has set, it’s a little too early to judge if it will be the hand-held powerhouse it’s expected to be. I did enjoy playing with it, and other than the short battery life I have nothing but positive things to say about it. But with a current lack of games that interest me, I don’t believe I will be buying one just yet. If you want and can afford one, I would suggest going to Gamestop and trying out a demo or watching game play videos online to see if it’s worth it for you. All Nintendo consoles have backwards compatibility, so if you already have a DS you have the option of trading it in for a better price on the 3DS, or you could just continue using your DS until you’re ready to make this upgrade. In the meantime I’m going to get back to work, because $290 doesn’t save itself up.

Dear Sam,

I have been in a committed relationship for 4 years and counting now, and am absolutely happy and in love. I want to settle down with him in the long run and have a future with him. He is everything I would want in a man and I would love to marry him one day.

Here is the situation: I have recently been talking to another person and am infatuated by him. He and I went to grade school together a few years back and never talked back then but are friends now. I feel like it's a missed connections type of deal from Craigslist. Anyway, we just started talking and became friends fairly quickly. He has a good friend and we are both happy in our relationships; however, I feel like there's a vibe between us. At the same time I think it's all in my head and it was just nice to feel something new. We discussed the topic of "us" and nipped it in the bud before it could grow. He said he didn't mean to lead me on in any way and that he would not leave his girl. From this point I knew it was just a little crush that meant nothing.

Now, let's fast forward. I was talking to him recently and he loves his girlfriend, so he says, but has recently been having problems with her. We spent hours talking about it and I persuaded him to stay with her and give it another try. I think I secretly know that if they did break up I would be prone to fall for him. I never had this feeling come over me so profound in all the years I have been with my significant other. I don't know how to tame my feelings! Strictly speaking, it's what we are and yet I still feel like there is a possibility for him and I.

Sincerely,

Distracted

Dear Distracted,

Boy, does this sound like a Lifetime channel movie! New feelings and sparks are always fun and exciting, but control it before you let it turn into a mess. You've been with your partner for four years so why end it now? If it has been this long, obviously there is something great between the two of you, especially through college! Do not let a slight interest distract you from the bigger picture. You said you love your boyfriend, so why are you questioning anything? Even though it's the first time you've felt this way in many years, it may be the fact that it's something fresh. Ever consider that it may be because you are not ready to settle down and want an excuse for it? You're going to hate me for saying this but you are a young, spontaneous college student. Do not become a person who becomes fixated on the idea of "Forever Yours" and "Happily Ever After." When it's your time to wear the white dress of your dreams you will know for sure without any doubt. You yourself said that you knew it was nothing more than a crush after you both discussed it.

This guy also has a girlfriend whom he says he loves so let's be true and take it on its own course. I understand you are his friend so just that, a friend who is there for him. Do not persuade him into directions for your personal benefits; friends do not do that. If you feel as though you are truly falling for this guy and not in love with your boyfriend anymore then go with what you feel. Who am I to stop you from acting upon what your heart desires? Make sure to think things through before making a hasty decision. It is not like you have been with your partner for four months, it's been four years! Things like that are not easy to come by these days, especially with love and commitment.

Think things through before acting upon them. Rationalize and explore the possibilities and opportunities behind each door. Neither of the two men could be the one for you or one could be. You are still young and should live life spontaneously. Think with your heart, but make sure you let your head make the final decision.

Sincerely,

Sam

It Doesn't Pay to be Sick on the Weekend

LEAH SCULLERS
STAFF WRITER

Living away from home can have its ups and downs, especially when you don't feel well. One of the problems of student life is coming down with something over the weekend. Before I go any further let me say that I have availed myself of the campus nurses office on several occasions over my two years at Johnson and Wales. Each time they were friendly and caring and got me on the path to recovery quickly.

The problem is not with the nurse or the facility, the problem is if you are smart you'll get sick on a weekday. I recently had the misfortune of developing an allergic reaction to some Thai food I ate at Asian Bistro, the problem compounded by the fact that it was Saturday night. I became alarmed when my symptoms of a rash, headache, and joint pain became worse and worse. What was I supposed to do? I didn't feel that the emergency room was appropriate and I knew that I couldn't wait until Monday to see the nurse. My friends ended up taking me to the East Side Urgent Care. A hundred dollars later I was on the slow road to recovery that should have begun a day earlier.

Why is the nurse's office closed on weekends? Here is the math, by my calendar the nurse's office is closed 76 days out of the school year and over 28 percent of every week. This is a breach of student security, the office of the nurse is not an administrative office and as such should not have normal week day hours, and it will be unthinkable to close the food services or the library two days out of each week, so why should medical care be any different? Until this policy is changed remember to try different foods on the weekends.

JWU Softball Splits GNAC Doubleheader With Lasell

DANIEL BOOTH
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

East Providence, R.I. -- The Johnson & Wales University softball team split a doubleheader against Lasell College in a Great Northeast Athletic Conference play at Pierce Field on Saturday afternoon. Johnson & Wales dropped the first game in nine innings by a margin of 3-1 and took the extra innings victory in game two, 4-0.

Game one saw quite the pitchers duel as freshman Taylor Cwalinski (Jackson, N.J.) threw the complete game for JWU and struck out 10 batters while walking only two in the nine innings of work. Lasell sophomore Allison Sahli (Brunnese, Mass.) also went the distance while striking out six. Wildcats and allowing an unearned run. Both teams battled through eight innings without a run scored until Tadis DeChiaro (Kingston, Mass.) tripled to right center to plate two runners for the Lasers. They tallied their final run on a fielder's choice ground ball by Kirsten Mammola (North Reading, Mass.) which scored DeChiaro. The Wildcats tacked on their lone run in the bottom half of the inning after Ellis Kim (Glendale, Calif.) reached on an error and scored Amanda-Rae Sullivan (East Granby, Conn.).

Freshmen Alyssa Babineau (Princeton, Mass.) and Kelsey Dunn (Silver Spring, Md.) were each 2-for-3 in the early game for JWU.

Babineau took to the mound in game two and retired her first 11 batters before surrendering a single up the middle in the fourth inning. Mammola started for the Lasers and struck out three batters through the seventh while allowing only four hits. Neither team could produce much offense in game two until Babineau moved the placed runner from second to third on a fielder's choice in the bottom of the 8th. Freshman Robyn Ziegler (Doyelstown, Pa.) laced a double to right field to score the runner and win the game for the Wildcats. Ziegler was 1-for-3 with an RBI in the second game for JWU while Santina Anosthak (Chester, N.J.) was 2-for-3 in the game for Lasell.

Johnson & Wales is now 10-13 overall and 5-5 in the GNAC while Lasell moves to 5-17, 5-3 in conference play. The Wildcats will return to action on Sunday, April 9th when they host St. Joseph's of Maine for a GNAC doubleheader, starting at 1:00 p.m.

JWU Baseball Sweeps Suffolk In GNAC Doubleheader

DANIEL BOOTH
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

East Providence, R.I. -- The Johnson & Wales baseball team topped Suffolk in a Great Northeast Athletic Conference double header at Pierce Field on Saturday afternoon. JWU posted a 4-1 win in the opener and completed the sweep with a 4-3 victory in the nightcap.

In the opener, Suffolk took the early 1-0 lead in the top of the first on an RBI single by freshman Jake Cistolo (Wrentham, Mass.). Johnson & Wales responded in the bottom of the first when senior Nick Almolo (Mahopac, N.Y.) belted the first pitch he saw deep over the right field fence to knot the game 1-1. In the bottom of the second, JWU sophomore Pete Rosa (Ambler, Pa.) led off with a single and came around to score when a single by senior Mike Murphy (Pawtucket, R.I.) put the Wildcats up 2-1. JWU capped off the scoring for the game in the bottom of the fourth as a two run home run by senior Brian Reay (Chehalisford, Mass.) propelled the Wildcats to the 4-1 victory. Rosa and Jake Dickerson (Germantown, Pa.) each had two hits in the win for JWU.

Junior Alex MacKay (Sanford, Maine) was outstanding on the mound for JWU, recording the complete-game victory, allowing one unearned run on four hits with three strikeouts in seven innings of work.

Suffolk once again struck early in the nightcap as senior Mark Adesna (Revere, Mass.) led off with a double and came around to score on a sacrifice fly by freshman Devin Jones (Ridolndale, Mass.) for the 1-0 lead. JWU responded in the top of the second as a three-run blast by Sayers, his second of the day, gave the Wildcats the 3-1 lead. The visiting Rams capitalized on a Wildcat miscue in the top of the third to cut the lead to 3-2. JWU extended their lead to 4-2 in the bottom of the third when sophomore Zach Boyes (West Warwick, R.I.) tallied a single and scored on an RBI single by Rosa for the 4-2 lead. Suffolk threatened in the top of the seventh and cut the lead to 4-3 with the bases loaded. It would not be enough, however, as Sayers made a diving catch in center field to secure the 4-3 win for the Wildcats. Adesna was 2-for-4 with a run scored in the loss for Suffolk. Boyes went 2-for-3 with a run while Rosa was 2-for-3 with a run and an RBI in the win for the Wildcats. Junior Mike Wood (Hudson, Mass.) picked up his third win for JWU, allowing two runs on four hits with two strikeouts in six innings while junior Chris DePalma (Taunton, Mass.) recorded his fourth save of the season for the Wildcats in the 4-3 victory.

With the two wins JWU is now 15-9-1 overall and 6-0 in the GNAC while Suffolk is 9-12 for the season and 2-2 in league play. The Wildcats will return to action on Sunday, April 9th when they host St. Joseph's of Maine for a GNAC twin bill, starting at 1:00 p.m.
