UB Announces Performers For Wahoo Concert

Krista Christensen
Culinary Arts/Life & Style Editor

Excitement and anticipation filled the air at UIB. Campus Events' 40 Days of Chaos Announcement Party, which was held on March 23, 2013. Students gathered at Pepsi Forum to be one of the first to find out who will be performing at this year's Wahoo Concerts. Various attendees could be heard as to who they hoped would be performing at Wahoo.

Besides the big reveal, the Announcement Party also held the finals for the Third Annual Cupcake Wars. Students sampled various cupcakes from the four teams and voted for their favorite. All of the cupcakes were delicious and incredibly creative. Various flavors included cookie dough filled, vanilla, and peanut butter and jelly. They were beautifully presented, and showcased the creativity and talent of the finalists. This year's winners were Chocolate Nest, Wasted, with their cookie dough filled cupcakes. They were decorated in blue and yellow frosting, and contained paw prints that incorporated Wicldcat Willie. Congratulations to Chocolate Nest, Wasted and all of the other finalists for a job well done!

The Gentleman Outfit took the stage as attendees waited for the anticipated reveal. They are an acoustic band that covers many of today's hits, as well as write their own songs. The Gentleman Outfit was a nice addition to the party and provided great entertainment. Some of the songs they performed included "Wonderwall" by Oasis, "Just the Way You Are" by Bruno Mars, and "The Middle" by Jimmy Eat World. The Gentleman Outfit performance was filled with familiar songs and the audience sang along to them. They added an interesting dynamic to the Announcement Party and created an enjoyable, enjoyable atmosphere for the attendees.

A new, interactive addition to the Announcement Party was the photo booth that gave attendees the opportunity to dress up in various hats and other accessories to create comical memories with their friends. This was a fun attraction that definitely allowed attendees to take their mind off of the anticipation they were feeling.

As the time for the announcement grew near UIB continued to hype up the crowd, and in one exciting moment, dramatically dimmed the lights, signaling the reveal was about to happen. To heighten the suspense, a short video revealed the not one, but three artists performing at Wildcat Wahoo this year: 3LAU, New Boyz, and Timelities. The crowd cheered with enthusiasm when the three-artist revealation was finally complete. In a departure from the Wildcat Concerts of years past, this year's big show will have more of a festival-like feel, with each artist having a chance to perform on the stage. If you haven't heard of 3LAU, New Boyz, or Timelities, be sure to check out UIB's Spotify playlists "Wahoo 13".

Wildcat Wahoo 2013 is definitely going to be one of the most entertaining and exciting experiences for concert-goers. The concert will take place on Friday, May 3 at 8 p.m. (doors open at 7 p.m.) at the Wildcat Center Main Gym. Students can purchase two tickets per JWU ID for $12 each via jwuvtpickets.com. Tickets go on sale April 15.

Surplus of Waste on Campus: What is Johnson & Wales Doing to Prevent it?

Dan Deville & Julia Abbes
Staff Writers

Waste is a problem every individual in the country faces on a daily basis, and has become a growing concern throughout the world. Choices made every day can either help or hinder the wastefulness in our country. This is happening in businesses, households, and even at colleges and universities.

Johnson & Wales is indeed a great university; however, waste is still a frequent problem here, unfortunately, just as it is in the rest of the country. We use paper plates, paper cups, and plastic silverware in the dining halls; throw out massive amounts of food in culinary labs daily; and professors require endless amounts of paper to be printed out, handed in, and then thrown away each trimester. It's evident that the prevention of waste is an area that we as a school and as a country need to focus on. Fortunately, Johnson & Wales is not ignoring the issue, and school officials are in fact looking at ways to prevent waste on campus.

The most obvious, yet also the most forgotten, way to reduce waste is to recycle. Although it may seem like old news, many people do not recycle properly or even at all. Though there has not been progressive action on correcting this issue at JWU, it has not gone unnoticed. According to Chef Valeria Molinelli, "It is weird to see students not understand the importance of recycling. I would have thought they were used to it from home... Education is key. It takes all of us. Often, even though we talk about it in class, we still dispose recyclables in the trash." Educating the student population on recycling is definitely a step in the right direction, but unfortunately it is just the beginning to a solution.

Many students and faculty abuse the amount of paper used in and out of class. Syllabuses, projects, homework, and essays are still required by professors and chefs to be printed out. Sometimes faculty can get as stagnant as making one-sided projects mandatory. To address these issues, Chef Molinelli said, "We can start by minimizing the use of paper. Technology allows us to do that now... I suggest printing power points three per page, but even then it is a waste. I don't think students should print anything, especially now that we use Ulearn. That's something we are still behind on." Ulearn is a perfect tool for students to utilize available technology; there is no need for unnecessary printing of documents and notes. Not only are we wasting paper, but we are also spending too much money on printer ink and toner.

Johnson & Wales, as a whole, needs to strategically find solutions to the wastefulness of all faculty and staff. JWU professors are not alone when it comes to waste. Campus Dining has taken some recent strides to help lessen its department's waste.

"We utilize small batch cooking to help prevent overproducing. Also, we eliminated trays in the all-you-care-to-eat operations, which cut out student food waste significantly... We plan on an educational program soon to help minimize the amount of food that students take then send into the dish room or throw away uneaten," says Campus Dining Director Steve Sandlbohm. Sandlbohm and Harboview are talking the right steps forward by serving food on reusable plates and having students use reusable utensils. According to Sandlbohm, the reasons only a couple of dining halls practice these habits include space limitations and program needs. As a whole, JWU Dining is fulfilling its role to implement programs to reduce waste and prevent overproducing.

At our culinary department, it is only natural that there is food waste in mass amounts on a regular basis. Every day our culinary labs throw away perfectly good food because we are overproducing. Also, because of the mass of our production output, much of the food in storage is thrown away because it goes bad. Though this is a problem that many people in our school have noticed, not much has been done. Recently, Johnson & Wales has modified its food waste reduction and has begun a composting initiative that will begin within the next year. It took JWU a while to make a change, but we have reached that point. We finally purchased two large capacity machines to digest food scraps and turn them into composting within 24 hours. That is going to help us use up our food waste from labs and dining halls,” said Chef Molinelli. This has been a huge step towards a less wasteful campus and has really helped change the mindset of many people, making them more conscious of their waste.

Though Johnson & Wales is far from waste-free, they have begun making the necessary first steps towards change. Chef Delle Donne has laid out a plan for JWU’s future thinking with Ulearn and our initiatives in composting and re-using of food and biodegradable cups and flatware, the university is doing an amazing job on cutting out waste. While the departments are working on reducing waste, it is also up to the student body to fulfill their part of the waste-free equation. From fully utilizing Ulearn, to recycling, throwing away as little food as possible and using reusable cups and flatware, the student body has taken an active role in helping to prevent JWU’s wastefulness.

First Annual Grassroot Soccer 3v3 Tournament: Come Play!!

Guilliana Rainer
Staff Writer

On April 26, 2013 Johnson & Wales Professor Kathleen Drohan and her Event Management and Leadership in Recreational/Leisure Setting classes are hosting the first annual Grassroot Soccer tournament on campus. The concept of the game was introduced to Professor Drohan and JUW students while working with the Grassroot program on a Study Abroad trip to South Africa. At the time, there were 5.8 million men, women, and children living with HIV and AIDS in South Africa. Tommy Clark founded Grassroot Soccer to address this epidemic after playing soccer professionally in Zimbabwe and witnessing both the devastation of the HIV virus and South Africa’s love of soccer.

In 2002, Clark met up with Ethan Zondo, winner of television’s Africa’s Got Talent, and they began to collaborate with professional soccer players throughout South Africa, teaching them similar experiences. Together, they formed Grassroot Soccer. They plan to have one million youth graduate from their HIV prevention program by the World Cup in 2014. Grassroot Soccer started off small and was unheard of, but the organization has taken off ever since the World Cup took place in South Africa in 2010.

The Grassroot Soccer coordinating team has seen the success of their tournament and has set a goal to raise thousands of dollars and get as many people as possible involved. Even individuals who know nothing about soccer are encouraged to come out and join the fun.

For everyone. With the help of JUW students, faculty, athletics, and other campus organizations the team hopes to make this event the best that it can be, all while raising awareness of the devastation that HIV still has in many countries around the world. There are a few details to remember about this event:

* All proceeds will go directly to Grassroot Soccer to help stop the spread of the HIV virus.
* Registration is currently open and will close on Monday, April 22.
* The cost to play is $10 per player, which includes a Grassroot Soccer T-shirt.

* There is a minimum of 4 players per team and a maximum of 5.

Please join the event on Facebook by searching Johnson & Wales Grassroot Soccer Tournament and follow on Twitter @JUW-GSS.
The Worst of Opportunities

Today, most college students work part-time jobs for extra spending money. These part-time jobs can fast cash in order to support their weekend hobbies and activities. For many, a company called Vemma is sweeping across college campuses throughout the US. They sell a product called Verve, an 8.3 oz. anti-oxidant and caffeinated energy drink. This company business plan has two markets: it sells energy drinks to its customers and it sells business opportunities to sell those same drinks. Vemma offers a multi-level marketing (MLM) business strategy to grow their company and sell their product. For those who are unfamiliar with MLM, it is an incentive program to recruit people into the business. These new recruits pay anywhere from $120 to $900 to join, and must recruit people underneath them in order to earn back their money. MLM is not a pyramid scam because employees sell the product; however, it is an easy way to lose money.

According to Jon M. Taylor of the Consumer Awareness Institute, statistics show that less than 1 percent of MLM participants profit; a person has to work full-time at a Vemma's product line can sell itself, but they sell more products by network marketing. A common question is, "Is it a scam?" It is, said,[quote]Our main concern is our cycle bonus. . . . It's the reason why we do Vemma." The answer is generally: Yes, they are not actually selling product. The product that is sold is the network marketing business; the college presentations on how students can make money. It is a business opportunity. It may be a coincidence that they choose easily manipulated, break-upable dialects as a target for this business. At these presentations, they show videos of young marketers driving sport cars that Vemma will pay for if their business is successful enough.

Real people have gained real money from this business, but the reality is that MLM deceives people. I believe Vemma values growing their business and making more money at the expense of students who are drawn in by misleading marketing practices. There is a lot of hype surrounding Vemma—the company has chosen the Dr. Oz show where they also sponsor sports teams, making it harder to resist. To add to that, the drink itself is actually good; it's both tasty and healthy. And, while they don't promise any money or leads, it's unfair to sell a plane ticket when the plane has already left the ground. A good product without good business ethics is problematic because the majority of profiteers in MLM are those who started at the top and those people know that. For students looking for opportunities, please keep your part-time job.

What do you think about this year’s performers for Wildcat Wahoo? I think they are good, but not what I was hoping for. I think we should have one great performer, who is really popular, like one of 3 separate performers. “

Life Behind the Resume: Shocking Truths Behind Social Media in the Professional Workplace

The Internet is now an accepted part of our daily lives. Youth are not the only ones utilizing online tools—it’s become the norm for all ages, including professionals in the business world. Social media sites provide a way for people to network, communicate, and explore various topics. This trend is growing rapidly and is becoming a standard in society, especially for young adults seeking careers. While social media is an effective way to network with others, the increased use of these sites can hinder professionals, if not used correctly.

Social media can have an adverse effect on a job search. Let’s face it, college students are often going out with friends, having a good time, and letting everyone know about it the following day—or as it’s happening. It’s just the way we live now, and the use of social media can be an incredible tool for students to date on everybody’s social lives. Yet, the content is displayed on these sights is generally visible to more people than one would think.

A recent 13 million Facebook users in the United States have never set, or are unfamiliar with, Facebook's privacy tool, according to wellsecresecurity. Unfortunately, many of these 13 million users are Facebook employees and their future employers have the right to look up any prospective employee via Facebook. They are looking to open their eyes to the life these future employees lead and often hide behind resumes.

At Johnson & Wales, we are trained from day one to be professional. Part of this professionalism need to be shown outside the classroom as well. The most impressive student on paper may be the most disorderly, according to Facebook profiles. Job recruiters don't see a difference, and they are determined to seek out the ones who are committed to a qualified and competent lifestyle.

Job recruiters are whittling down the list of applicants by visiting their Twitter and Facebook accounts. In July of 2012, Time Magazine stated that 92 percent of employers are using social networks for recruiting purposes in the coming years. These professionals are also on the lookout for any writing and grammatical errors in Facebook status posts and tweets. Ultimately, these employers are opting to scope out social media sites to get a better idea and whether or not an individual will fit into the work environment or company culture.

According to John Joos, a professor from Nova Southeastern University, social media consultant companies use "advanced Internet technologies to find potential employees." They look for prospective talent and what they want in life. Job recruiters are candidates like to do in their free time to express different forms of creativity. Before they were hired based upon their interview talk and what they looked like on paper. Now, there are a number of tools recruiters can use to get a feel for whether or not someone will fit in with the company, relying them from further stress down the road.

There is a way to be professional and avoid a harmful representation. Facebook is a great tool for college students to network themselves. However, there is often a fine line between one’s personal life and professional life. Unfortunately, you can’t create two accounts under the same name to keep these two lives separate. You have to do the option to set very specific privacy settings to control who accesses your content and how much of it. You can be as public or as private as you want to be on Facebook. Opt for ultimate privacy settings, limiting what the general public can come across.

There are also a few ways to clean up your Facebook account. First of all, choose an appropriate profile picture that represents you in a serious and professional way. Make certain appropriate items public and keep the rest private. For example, your "real" section can include general (and brief) information about you for anyone to see. However, don’t allow just anyone to view pictures on your timeline because there might be content that could misrepresent you. Another good idea is to un-tag any photos of you that are embarrassing, immature, or unprofessional. You can also specify how people tag you in photos or videos and comment or share your posts. Facebook also gives you the option to hide friends from sharing content or making posts to your Facebook wall. For the most part, try to be mindful of what you post as anything you share will be part of the general feed and your friends may be networked with potential colleagues.

Instead of networking via Facebook, consider LinkedIn. This website was specifically designed to connect individuals with possible employers or customers, and to utilize professional networking tools. According to Time Magazine, 93 percent of recruiters are using LinkedIn to discover talent, so making the profile section flawless is imperative. Overall, social media has flourished and is now a social norm. Companies in countries across the world utilize these websites to seek out the best of the best employees. Job recruiters are maximizing their time and efforts by weeding out those individuals who are unprofessional and do not know how to keep their personal and professional life separate. As future employees are more aware of the truths in social networking, as well as the proper utilization of these interactive professional tools.
Flavor Fusion:
Nami’s Grand Opening Meets Expectations

Ali Fuller
Ideas & Opinions / Tech & Design Editor

Watch out Providence; if it’s even possible, Federal Hill is stepping it up! The available dining options on “The Hill” increased this March when Avenue welcomed Nami, an Asian fusion restaurant to the street. On March 6, the doors opened to the public, revealing the Japanese-eatery, sushi, and hibachi bar. I don’t know how people can resist the contemporary and classy, yet comfortable ambience inside Nami.

I arrived at Nami around 2 p.m. for lunch with four other students. The five of us happened to be doing a restaurant critique for a class project, so I was able to review the restaurant for both this project and the Campus Herald. The hostess was incredibly pleasant, welcoming us with a smile and offering us a friendly greeting as she walked us to our designated table. We made a reservation, not knowing how much business to expect for this new restaurant during the week. The restaurant was surprisingly quiet, but they assured us the dinner hours are much more lively.

The simple, elegant menus were placed in front of us, as well as a special lunch menu. The lunch menu offers sushi, hibachi, and entree specials. This helped narrow down my selection because the traditional menu was overwhelming. I had to choose between sushi rolls or sashimi, and both looked amazing. I was thinking sashimi sounded like the way to go. The sushi bar in the rear of the restaurant served freshly outer-sewe clean, which is exactly what I wanted to see before ordering my raw fish. The sushi special I ordered included this salad, soup, and 12 pieces of sashimi for $14. I thought this seemed like a great deal! After ordering, the waiter promptly arrived with our salads. A beautiful hibachi grill setup at Nami. Photo taken by Ali Fuller.

The neatly dressed salad was exquisite! The dressing was a sweet yet tangy sesame flavor, which was much different than the typical Asian ginger dressing most restaurants serve. There was a fresh slice of mango placed precisely on top of the greens that added a nice sweet taste to the bitter and tangy flavors of the salad.

The miso soup came next, and not a minute too late. The soup was served hot — always a bonus — and the broth had the perfect amount of flavor, not overly salty or tasteless. There were savory oyster mushrooms, broccoli rabe, and even a small slice of beef in the miso soup. This was an untraditional way of serving miso soup, but was definitely scrumptious. I don’t think I left one drop in the bowl, and I still had a whole plate of sashimi to eat.

The plate of raw fish came after and was so colorful and gorgeous, I was half-tempted not to ruin the masterpiece. But, the fish was topped too delicious, and I couldn’t resist! Each fish was wonderful: the salmon, tuna, swordfish, and white fish — all of it!

The entire meal was certainly worth $14. It seemed a bit high at first for lunch, but the amount of food we were served; along with the fresh, warm bread with unique Asian-flavored dipping sauces was worth every last penny!

Also included on Nami’s menu are chip, drink, beef, and other seafood entrees ranging anywhere from $20-$30. Two full hibachi tables are available for reservations, and the restaurant also includes a private room, full-service bar, and sushi-bar. I’m sure when it takes to the new happenin’ place to wine and dine on Federal Hill! Save some bucks, make a trip up to Providence’s historic neighborhood, and thank me later!

The New Skinny

Micah Calliet
Staff Writer

Last week, American Eagle revealed a new “Skinny Skinny” jean: pants that fit so tightly they are said to “fit like a second skin.” In commercials, the pants are made out to be comfortable, but appear to be a little too revealing by showing the entire crack of wearers’ behinds. Presumably, they are similar to tights and probably made with a little more spandex material than normal skinny jeans would be, right?

Wrong.

When looking up the new jean on the American Eagle website, a spray can, two washes and a one size fits all option are displayed. So, the new “Skinny Skinny” jean from American Eagle isn’t actually a jean—it is a spray! This strange take on skinny jeans got many people talking, and consequently landed American Eagle’s Vice President of Brand Marketing, Bob Holobinko, on The Today Show. He stated that American Eagle is not actually selling the spray paint, but that it is a pure marketing ploy.

This cheeky marketing strategy is a new and slightly odd approach for American Eagle. The video advertisement for the revealing spray-jeans garnered thousands of views on American Eagle’s website. The video has also been heavily talked about in various news broadcasts and social media networks. Needless to say, American Eagle’s trick advertisement has been beneficial to the company. Apparently, the marketing ploy was so successful that there will be another similar advertisement released in the near future.

If the new “Skinny Skinny” by American Eagle was not a marketing ploy, would you be tempted to buy the spray? Or is the idea behind this too bizarre for your taste? Weigh in with your opinion on Twitter @ProFashion or @JWUCampus Herald.

Micro-lofts – the new fad?

Ashley Slater
Staff Writer

As many of you have already begun to notice, the Arcade Providence will soon be reopening. This “mall” was preserved as a national historic landmark and has recently been enhanced with a modern twist. The first floor has been filled with newly designed retail shops and restaurants, with a second floor that will be the home of 48 lucky micro-loft residents.

The arcade is the nation’s oldest indoor shopping mall and is recognized for its architectural structure. “The reopening of the arcade is an exciting development for Providence. This project breathes life into America’s oldest indoor mall and one of our city’s most historically significant buildings,” says Providence’s Mayor Angel Taveras.

There has been a lot of recent excitement over the living spaces that have been created. These micro-lofts have been built into this shopping complex to provide students and other members of the community an affordable place to live in the downtown area. Designed to run efficiently, the micro-lofts also create a new, thriving community. The designs are even being featured in an exhibit at the Museum of the City of New York from January 23 through September 15.

When renting one of these luxurious lofts for $550 per month, you will also receive a kitchen with a refrigerator, sink, dishwasher and microwave; a full bath and shower; built-in beds; seating and storage; a common room with a flat screen TV; bike access; additional storage on the basement level; coded security; laundry facilities; and parking access.

It all sounds wonderful doesn’t it? Many students think so too—there is already a waiting list!

Web Only TV Shows

Maya Shemolewitz

As it is in life, the new always phantoms out old. It has been over 20 years since many of us used compact disc or cassette players in our homes. Today, many of us in the age demographic of 18-35 use our iPods, or even our cell phones to listen to music. And television has been no different. From CRT to flat-screen televisions showing 3D movies, the transfer from analog to digital has changed and it is still continuing to evolve.

For the past ten years networks have been enriching our viewing experience by adding special content of America’s favorite television shows to their websites. Shows like “Alias”, “24”, “Lost” and more recently, USA’s “Necessary Roughness” have included not only the streaming of full episodes, but of specially produced content as well. This includes The “Rookie” and “The Ncis Files” from “24” and “Necessary Roughness” respectively.

However, it seems online television is ready to take the next leap to a brand new world of web television. While web TV has actually been around since 1996, most of the content was mediocre and received very little notice. “All My Children” is set to premiere online, via Hulu and iTune, and “Arrested Development” will premiere a 14-episode season on Netflix in May.

The new season set new standards for online television. “House of Cards”, the first successful fulltime web television show, was exclusively produced for online viewing in the United States. The success of “House of Cards”, which is already in production on its second season, has been a real game changer for an industry that is in desperate need of change. And, Netflix is not stopping with “House of Cards”. Four more shows are currently in production, and in April the streaming websites will premiere another new series titled “Hemlock Grove”.

Providence is home to a plethora of cultural, culinary, and artistic events. An awesome tradition that not too many students know about is Gallery Night, an event that takes place on the third Thursday of every month from March to November. Starting at 5 p.m., twenty-seven Providence galleries open their doors for free admission until 8 p.m.

There a couple different ways to attend Gallery Night. If you’re looking for a free, guided tour, you can take a bus from Regency Plaza that will transport you to highlighted museums over the course of two hours. You can also take a bike tour, walking tour, or roam as an individual (maps are available at www.gallerynight.info).

If free admission isn’t enough, many of the galleries offer music, celebrity-guided tours, and interactive activities. For example, the RISD museum provides guests with a table full of art supplies and stools so that you can sit in front of the art that inspires you the most and draw as much as your heart desires.

Gallery Night is the perfect way to start your weekend. Go with your friends, bring a date, or have an artistic evening to yourself! You definitely can’t graduate from Johnson & Wales without making a trip to this unique Rhode Island staple.

Pebble Watch
Anton "Tony" Bailey
Staff Writer

Finally, the watch that allows you to check your incoming calls, emails, text messages, Facebook, and many more applications is here. Eric Migicovsky, the founder of Pebble, has convinced me to jump into a reality with his sophisticated, lightwight watch.

Pebble is not a smartphone for your wrist; it is a watch that synchronizes your mobile data via Bluetooth. The watch vibrates to notify the user of incoming alerts such as Facebook messages, Twitter, weather alerts, SMS, and more. The notification will be displayed on your wrist and you can dismiss the notification by simply shaking your wrist. For example, let's say you are in a meeting and your phone is in your pocket. Upon receiving a message, the watch takes the content of the message from your phone, vibrates, and then displays it on your watch screen. Incredible! Not only can you tell the time, the Pebble Watch, but you can also load apps using your phone.

Setting up your watch is quite simple; just download the Pebble app onto your iOS or Android device and connect your cell phone to the watch; then you're all set. Pebble works on iPhone and Android devices, but not on BlackBerry, Windows 7, or Palm phones. The screen has a 144 x 16 pixel display that shows black and white e-paper, which is intended to display the appearance of normal ink on paper. There is a backlit feature that allows for easy viewing at night.

The Pebble Watch has a music app that gives you the ability to play, pause, or skip tracks on your phone. For example, let's say you like to take a shower or swim while you are listing to music. The Pebble Watch can play the song on your wrist, you can change or even skip a track. Amazing! Oh, I forgot to mention that the Pebble Watch is water resistant, both fresh water and saltwater. Pebble is rated at 5 ATM (ATM "Atmosphere"

Army of Two
Devils Cartel
Adam Lion

I just completed Army of Two. The game was fun, action-packed, and featured two new young operatives, Alpha and Bravo. In this game Salem and Rios run their own private military group, called Two. You start out with a quick training course before you're carted off to Mexico. The game has replay value—you can conveniently go back and choose optional routes that you didn't take the first time. It takes about nine hours to complete on the normal level, and around twelve hours on the hard levels. The game makers brought back the idea of game customization and plenty of ammo for each gun. The addition of a customization feature for operatives that includes items such as gear (armor), masks, and tattoos enhanced the the game and provided variety. The best of these features is the ability of the player to create his or her own unique mask. This game is fun to play with a friend and the game styles are similar. The only difficulty I encountered was the difficulty to move to cover. Overall, I would give Army of Two a 3/5.

Fire Emblem: Awakening - Nintendo Responds to their Wake-Up Call
Elizabeth King
Staff Writer

If you are an avid lover of tactical role playing games (RPG), like me, you've probably heard of the magical Fire Emblem series. Fire Emblem is RPG based in a medieval environment. You are required to command a given number of characters against enemy forces that are much larger than your own. The game forces you to plan your army around the opposing side in a chess-like format. Each character has specific abilities that allow him to maneuver across the playing field within a set number of steps per turn. You will be battling other player, enemy, and (when present) partner teams. Characters gain experience points through fighting, while scoring more for boss-unit kills, and can level twenty before being promoted to a higher class and repeating the process.

The game is made of the series, Fire Emblem: Awakening, contains new elements that I fell in love with. By placing units in different battle units can give battling bonuses to one another, characters can build "support" levels. Support conversations are a common element in RPGs, and they are used to build up the standard with a new mechanic that allows units to marry during your marriage to be an endgame reward. Changing units relevant to your journey, as this game introduced "travel" mode, so the future choice of your units can join your army. These children inherit skills from their parents, so conversations are not only fun to read, but also strategic.

Another semi-new element is the customizable tactician unit. You can choose the name, gender, hair color, eye color, body type, and voice of this unit, allowing you to fully immerse yourself in the thrill of battle. Your unit, referred to as an "avatar" in the English release, tends to have balanced stats and can use weapons or magic, depending on your preference.

My favorite new element is an item called a Second Seal, which allows you to send your unit back to a first-stage level one without losing their previous growth rates. I was able to maximize the stats of some units without even having to promote them with a Master Seal. It is an excellent touch.

Other positive elements to this game include a mesh of the many best pieces from previous installations. The use of a world map has resurfaced, and random encounters seem to happen more often. This is great to prepare for battle, and adds to the number of powerful units you can use.

Finally, this game introduced a feature to help those who are new to the franchise: turning off the "permadeath" system. This means that before you start your campaign you can choose whether you would like to let your units die forever in battle, or use them in the next encounter should they be defeated. Although this is good for beginners, I must recommend keeping permadeath on. It is an integral part of Fire Emblem, and increases your need for strategy and attachment to the characters, whom are all unique and interesting. Unfortunately, this game is not perfect. There are multiple difficulty levels to choose from, ranging from normal to insane. You must take into account that mode to be a challenge, and I am a veteran player. Insane and Insane+ are simply too difficult for any rational person to beat, and the battles become more about luck than strategy, which this series is known for.

The personalities of characters are all altered in this game, even though the effort is not too severe on the overall experience. I prefer an achievement system that works on "progression.

Pax East Wraps Up
Ryland Grozinski
Staff Writer

Earlier this month the Penny Arcade Expo East took place in Boston for a weekend full of new games, technology, and of course, cosplay. There is a lot of some of the most interesting news that came out of the convention.

Fans of Bioware titles, such as Mass Effect and Dragon Age, will be happy to know that Bioware is currently working on a new series in a brand new universe. Though they struggled through negative reviews and criticism on their latest releases (Mass Effect 3, Dragon Age 2), Bioware is starting something fresh. They hope that they can return to their previously held reputation. They've done futuristic sci-fi and medieval fantasy, so it's anyone's guess where this next title will put the player.

Blizzard, the developers behind Diablo III and StarCraft have been showing off the their annual Indie Showcase. This year, IGN was allowed to be a part of the platform of choice for independent and low budget developers. Gamers to look for include the Saturday Night Massacre, an RPG inspired by 1980's cartoons; and Major Magnet, a kinetic and fast paced action/MMO type game.

If you missed out on this year's Pax East and want to know more, check out east.paxsite.com for the full event schedule, articles, reviews, and more. Oh, and since set the date and place, PaxW will be returning to the East Coast around this time next year, so keep your eye out for access passes.

language settings every time I activate the software. For some odd reason, the game forgets that I saved the spoken dialogue to Japanese, and I have to be reminded to hear it in Japanese. It makes less than perfect English voices when I open my save file.

Finally, I would like to take the time travel. I think it is a cheap plot tool; the premise and the idea is not original and makes no sense, and it seems out of place in a medieval, logic-based game.

Fire Emblem is well-sold and a great improvement to the previous Fire Emblem: Shadow Dragon. I think that it almost did not translate Awakening because of the previous title's failure, but I am glad they brought this new game to us. They made countless improvements to the developers and my interest for this game is high. I recommend this game and rate it 4.5 out of 5.
