SAN FRANCISCO'S

FAMOUS OLD SHIPS

The ships docked across the street are part of the National Maritime Museum and are administered by the National Park Service. All are welcomed.

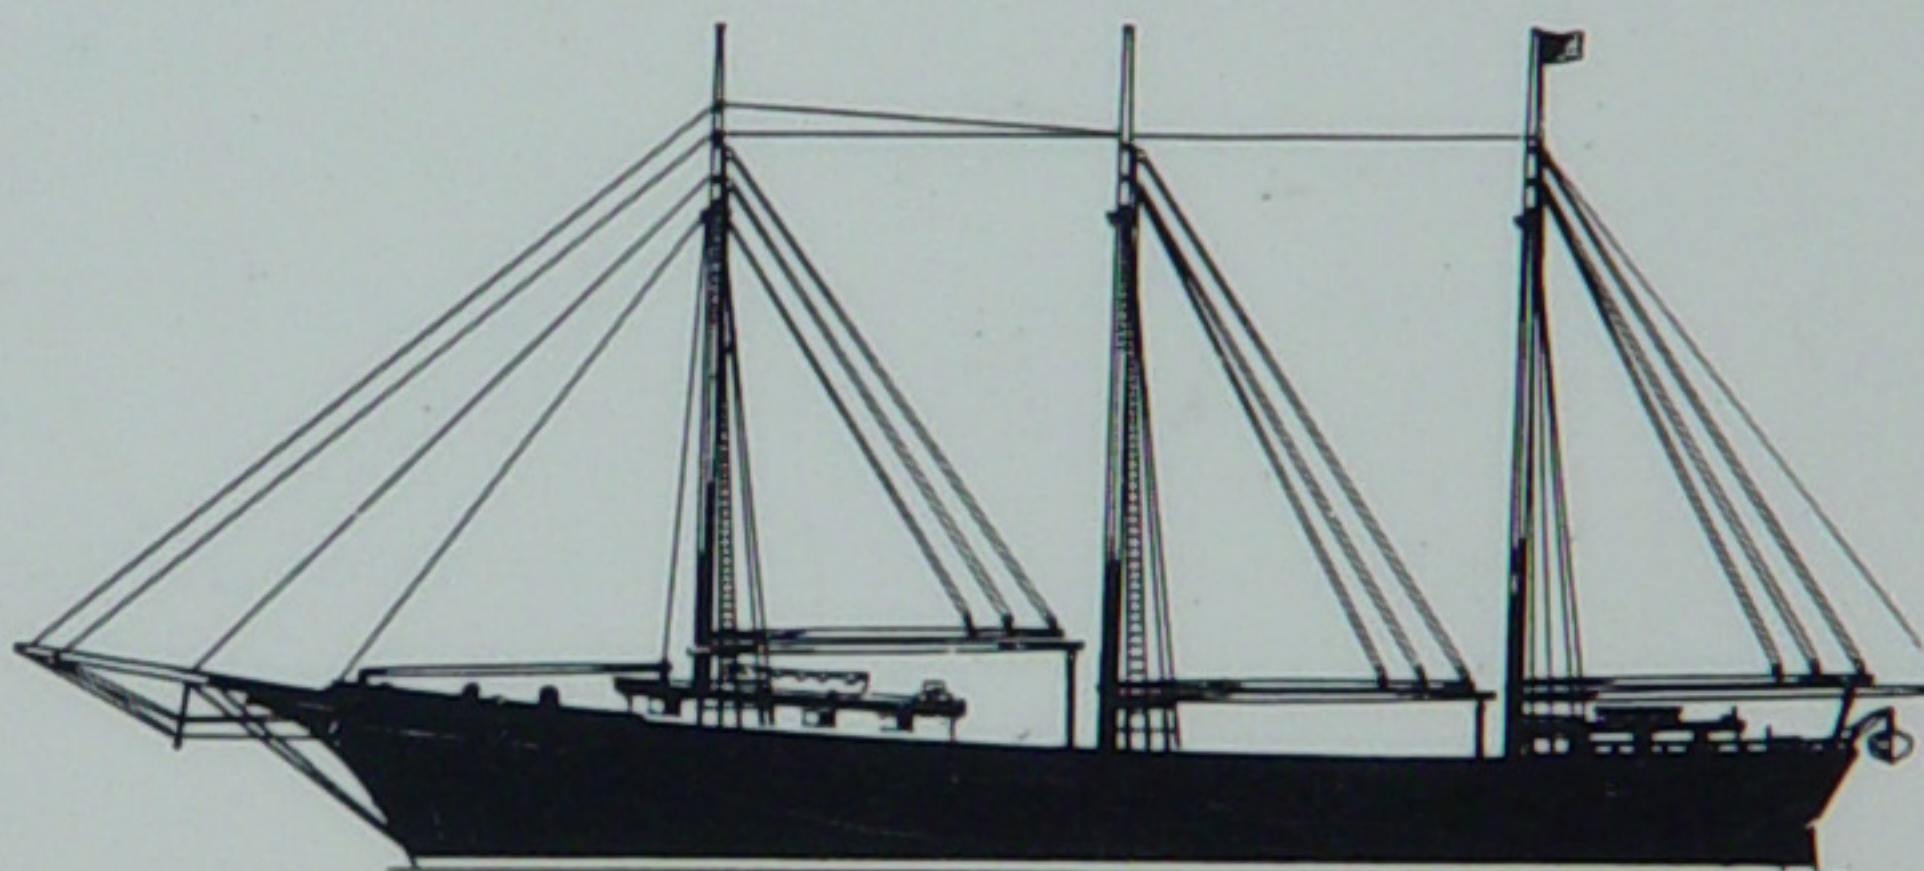

The Alma

The last scow schooner, or hay scow, built in 1891. She and 600 others were used to bring hay to San Francisco horses, some before the gold rush began.

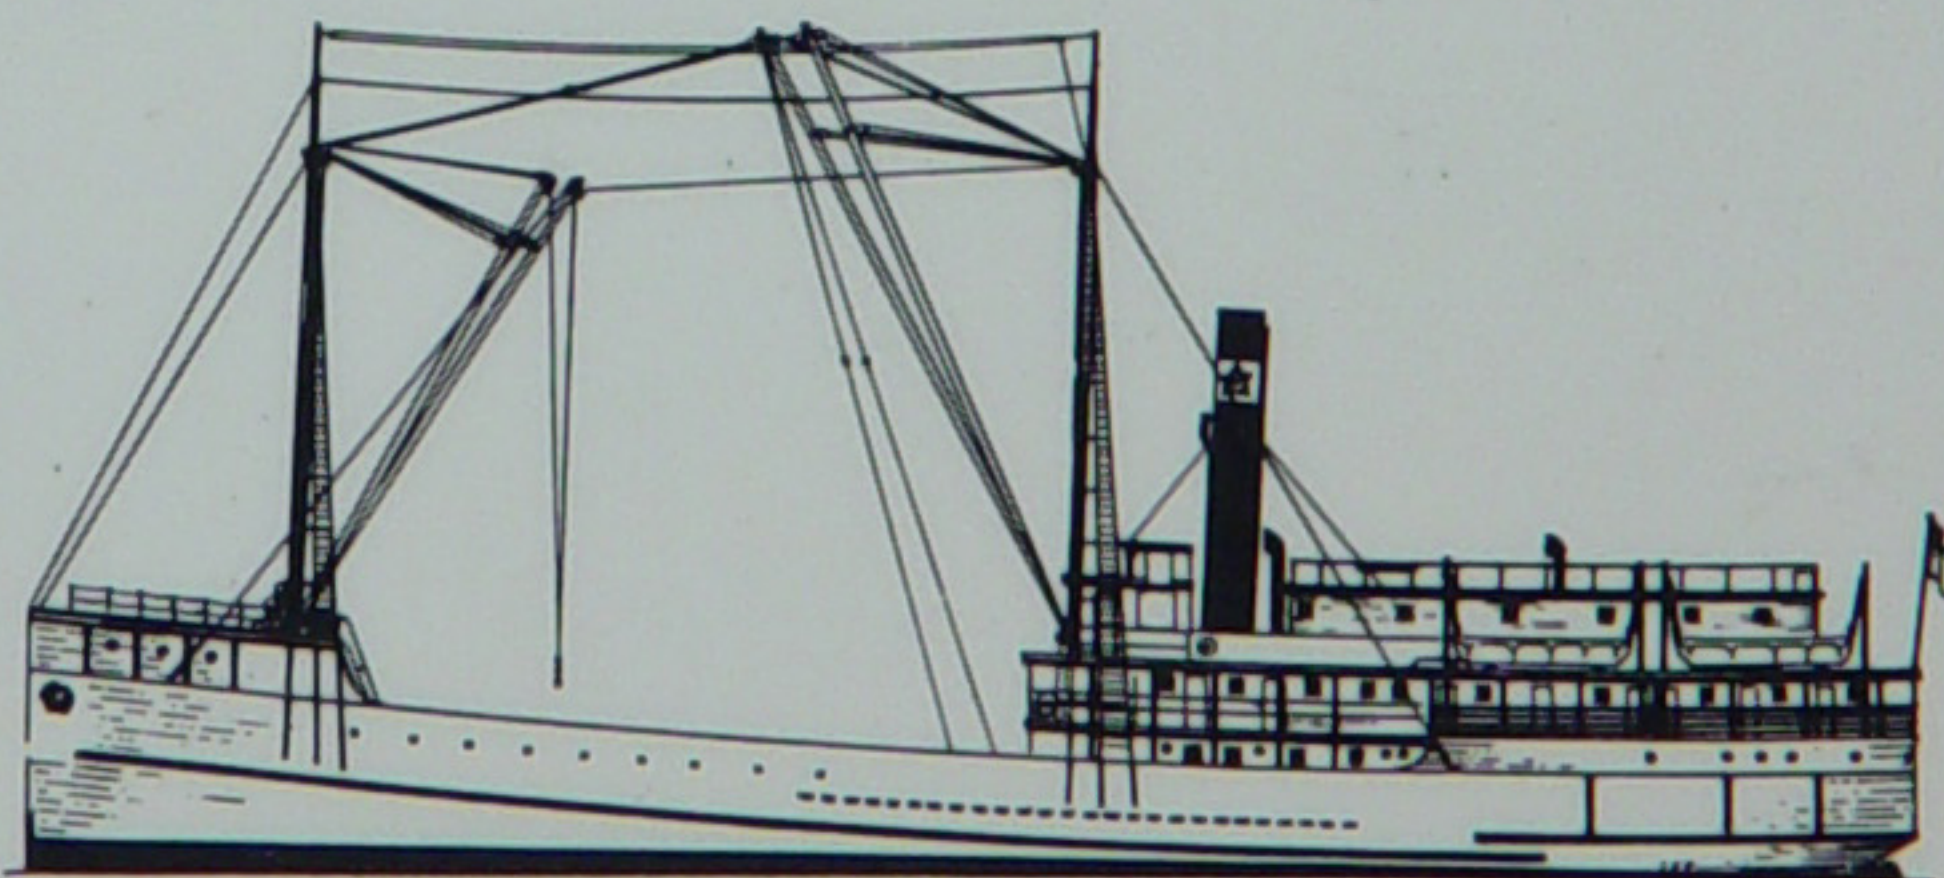

The C. A. Thayer

Lumber schooner built in 1895 near Eureka, Calif. She carried lumber from the Pacific Northwest to San Francisco and San Pedro with occasional trips to Guaymas and Fiji. She later became a salmon packet and codfisherman. She made the last commercial sailing voyage from the Pacific Coast in 1950.

The Wapama

Last representative of the famous West Coast "Steam Schooners", or the "Scandinavian Navy". She was built in Oregon in 1915, has an 825 HP engine, carried 1 million board feet of lumber and 30 passengers. 225 similar ships were built, and replaced lumber schooners like the C. A. Thayer (above).

The Eureka

Originally the "Ukiah", she carried railroad trains from Tiburon to San Francisco. Renamed the "Eureka" in 1922, she ran between the Ferry Building and Marin, and later, Oakland. The world's largest (300 feet long, seats 2300), she was the last operating sidewheel, walking-beam steamer in the U.S.
