The balloons depicted in our mural are reproductions of some of the more famous experiments with lighter than air flight. The third balloon from the left in relief over the door is the Montgolfiere in which Pilatre de Rozier in 1783 made man's first flight.

Others in the mural depict balloons built for Napoleon, and the one in which America's first Balloonist, Dr. Jeffries, made the first successful crossing of the English Channel in 1785, and "The Great Balloon of Nassau" which was in service for 35 years and was among the first to be used for research in the upper air.

Since 1783 until today balloons have been used for sport, research and by armies of the world. During the Siege of Paris in 1870, during the Civil War and in two World Wars balloons have played an important part. The record for man's highest flight was made in a balloon and still stands at 72,395 feet. Even today enthusiasts follow the sport of free ballooning and plans are in process to better the altitude mark set in 1935.

From man's first attempt at flight, as shown in our mural, great advances have been made until today you can look out of our windows and see the latest achievements in sure, fast, safe air travel.
