Library Adds LOTS of New Items
Including Books on CD

You will notice from this month's prolific "new items" section of the library newsletter that we have been very busy upgrading the library's resources. To add to the quality of our Arts & Sciences-related materials we have significantly upgraded aspects of our reference collection. One of the biggest additions has been the Encyclopedia of Religion which will be of value to students taking the world religions course next academic year. Numerous other books were also added for this course as well. In addition to the course on religion, the Charlotte campus is also ramping up resources for courses in multiethnic literature and sports literature as well. Some of the new titles acquired for the latter were taken from Sports Illustrated's Top 100 Sports Books of All Time. One other notable addition has been to add a handful of books on CD. While most monographs will still be ordered in a traditional format students, faculty, and staff will now be able to choose from a modest selection of books on CD as well. To see what titles we have just jump ahead to the "New Books on CD" section in this newsletter.

Paperback Hullabaloo!

Hear ye, hear ye…calling all readers! The Charlotte Campus library now has a book exchange! Come hither to exchange YOUR paperback books for free! Fantasy, mystery, romance, motivational, sci-fi….they are all available for your leisurely read. Simply come into the library and browse the selection which is located in front of the circulation desk. Take as many books as you would like to read and leave the books you want to exchange on the table. Check-out is not needed and you can keep the books for as long as you like. Don’t have any books to exchange? No worries. This exchange is open to everyone regardless of whether or not you can donate books.

Examples of books currently on the exchange table:

- You Only Die Twice, Edna Buchanan
- Illusions The Adventures of a Reluctant Messiah, Richard Bach
- The Nanny Diaries, Emma McLaughlin and Nicola Kraus
- Tribulation Force, Tim LaHaye and Jerry Jenkins

The “Hidden” Googles: The Web’s Best-Kept Secrets Can Save Tons of Research Time

By now, everyone is familiar with “googling”. What could be easier than putting a question or a string of words into Google’s simple, streamlined search box? The primary drawback to using this tool is its power- Google searches retrieve overwhelming amounts of information. So, how do you take advantage of the ease of Google and hone your searches to the most valuable information? Use the hidden Googles listed below to save tons of research time!

Google Earth: Who’s up for a free trip to Cabo? With Google Earth, you can zoom in on almost any place on Earth through satellite pictures. From your desktop, you can see gondolas in the canals of Venice! On the Google Earth Community bulletin board, other users post information on the best locations and play a sort of geographic scavenger hunt game. For the extra adventurous, there are tons of place markers to haunted locations, complete with background stories! Some cities are in 3-D, which allows you to see them from the ground up, and you can search within locations for businesses, airports, etc.

Google Finance: If you’re having trouble finding information on a company or trend in Business & Company Resource Center or Business Source Premier, give Google Finance a shot! Information in this search engine is much more credible than searching the entire Web, as much of the information comes from Google’s agreements with reputable information brokers like Reuter’s, Morningstar, and Hoover’s. If you know which company you’re looking for, searching is just as simple as typing in the name or ticker symbol. To find broader lists of companies, you just type the term (ex. “fast food”, “cruise lines”, “resorts”). The information varies by company- some companies, like Harrah’s Entertainment, have charts, information and links to company officer information, profiles, financial information and news articles from reputable agencies. Others, like Hyatt Regency, lack the financials and in-depth officer information.

Google News: Want to find the latest news without having to dig through dozens of blog and message board links? Google News retrieves the last 30 days of news stories from 4,500 agencies around the world. Google explains that their tool uses an algorithm rather than humans to retrieve information, which eliminates retrieval based on ideology (http://news.google.com/intl/en_us/about_google_news.html). At a glance, you’ll see how agencies from different cultures and viewpoints have reported events. Google News updates every 15 minutes, so you can always be sure that it has the latest news available online!

Google Maps: Want to see all the pizza joints within a two-mile radius? Google Maps allows you to search for types of businesses in a given area, and with the click of the mouse will pull up directions to your choice! In addition, Satellite View provides photographic mapping with highlighted routes so that you can see the landmarks along the way. My search for “Vietnamese Restaurants in Charlotte, NC” retrieved 37 listings. When I clicked on my favorite, a text box appeared on the map that pointed to the location, gave the contact information, and linked me to online reviews! I was able to type the starting point for directions directly into the text box instead of having to go to a “get directions” page.

Google Scholar: By far, the most controversial “Hidden” Google is Google Scholar. This search tool allows you to search the Web for scholarly sources (articles, books, theses, unpublished papers, etc.). Google Scholar is most useful in the beginning stages of research when you are trying to find background information on a topic or are just curious to see how much information is available. A big advantage is that you can retrieve reports from a variety of trade associations and scholarly sources without having to search through each organization’s site individually. But, don’t abandon the library databases just yet. Google Scholar is still in its Beta (testing) version, and has many limitations. Full-text is not always available, and sometimes it is difficult to determine where a retrieved article or book chapter originated (bad news for your MLA citations). And, while Google Scholar depends on information from a wide range of scholarly organizations, the information is often spotty. A search in Hospitality & Tourism Complete, for instance, provides many more full-text options on the casino industry than Google Scholar.

At home you may have books placed on shelves, books stashed in drawers, books hidden in cabinets, and books pushed under the bed. There are books waiting to be read, books already read, and books kept for reference. If only there was an easy way to keep track of all these books. There is! Connect to LibraryThing at www.librarything.com and catalog your personal library. Sound complicated? It is as easy as entering the title from your book. LibraryThing searches the catalogs of libraries and Amazon.com to immediately “catalog” your book for you.

So how does this help you to organize your books? LibraryThing allows you to give descriptive tags to the book entry. For example, for the book The Wives of Henry VIII, by Antonia Fraser, you might want to tag it “history,” “tudor,” “16th century” or “royalty.” Using these tags you can quickly create a list of the book you own on a certain subject. You might also want to tag books “library,” “sunroom,” or “beach house,” to indicate the location of the books in your collection. You can even tag them “read” or “unread,” “borrowed” or “loaned”.

After entering your books you will be able to search for them using the tags you created. Tags enable you to search through your book collection in a way that makes sense to you. You can make your list private or share it with others. You can learn about the book collections of others who share your interests and use their lists to develop your own collection.

No software is needed for this online service that allows you to catalog up to 200 books for free and unlimited books for a small fee. Visit www.librarything.com for further information, frequently asked questions, and demonstrations. Celebrate National Library Week in April by becoming your own librarian!

Listen Up!

Some people learn best by doing, some by hearing, and others by watching. Good instructors try to incorporate elements of each into their classes, but there are times when a lecture, is a lecture, is a lecture and your mind wanders. Good listening skills are important, even if you learn best by doing or viewing. Here are three easy steps to becoming a better listener in class.

Focus
Focus on the topic, not the speaker. The instructor may be wearing something distracting and may talk with an odd accent, but if you let these things distract you from the topic you won’t be listening to learn. Pay attention to key words and repeated phrases; listen for statements that the instructor emphasizes.

Engage
There has to be some motivation for listening and if the subject isn’t your favorite, then find another way to become motivated. What do you think the speaker will discuss next? What are the key points? How does what the speaker is saying relate to another subject or to an assignment that you have? Is there a question you would like have answered?

Apply
Understand how this information can benefit you and put it to use. Make connections, take notes, and think about the big picture. Learn to use what you are hearing in class to further your studies and prepare for a career.

Reasons to Read...Periodicals

When you hear the term “periodicals,” does it bring to mind Elle, GQ, Time Magazine, Business Week, Harpers Bazaar, In Style, Sports Illustrated, or Bon Appétit? Those are just a few examples of the popular magazine titles available at the Johnson & Wales University Charlotte Library. Along with scholarly journals and trade publications our periodicals consist of a grand mix of titles that are designed to meet your educational needs. Fortunately this mix happens to include some of the magazines everyone loves to read AND several newspapers: The Charlotte Observer, The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, USA Today and Financial Times.

Each month “Reasons to Read” in The Brew will focus on a few articles from our periodicals collection or feature non-fiction books that may be of professional or personal interest to our students, faculty, and staff.

Southern Living – March 2006
Right in our own neighborhood – Pierre Bader, owner of Charlotte’s TOWN, Sonoma Modern American and ARPA restaurants is featured in the March issue’s bonus section “Carolina Living, People and Places,” TOWN is just across Cedar Street from the Library and features a design that lets pedestrians view all stages of food preparation.

Special Events Magazine – February 2006
What is 60’ long and 6” wide and spouts fire? “Noche del Fuego” (Night of Fire), the winner of Special Event’s Magazine’s 2006 Gala Award for Best Dining Table Design. This issue features all award winners with full color photographs and descriptions of events that won in a variety of categories, such as: Best Fair/Festival; Best Invitation; Best Dining Table Design; Best Fund Raising Event; Best Floral Design; Best Tent Installation; Best Entertainment Concept and Execution and much more. This issue also includes the results of their annual survey predicting event rental industry forecasts and challenges for 2006.

North Carolina – March 2006
Looking for golf getaway? A place to improve your game? Perhaps a great summer job at a golf resort? North Carolina’s Annual Executive Golf Guide lists the results of their survey of over 3,000 business leaders. The top-ten rankings include favorite courses for leisure and business, and best value courses. It also includes the top five courses in every area of NC and favorites in neighboring states.

A Taste For Literature

“I tasted parsimony and extravagance commingled on a single plate. Anh Minh, in this way, taught me what he understood to be the most important lesson of his trade. He knew that to be a good cook I had to first envision the possibilities. I had to close my eyes and see and taste what was not there. I had to dream and discern it all on my tongue. Slowly, gradually, I was able to do just that.”

The Book of Salt, by Monique Truong

Que Pasa

Do you speak Spanish? Do you know someone who does? Please encourage them to stop by the library and grab a copy of Que Pasa near the entrance of the library.
Comfort Food

What is your favorite comfort food? Comfort food is simple, familiar food that brings solace, conjuring up memories from childhood. This is the food we eat when we feel stressed out and need to be reminded of happier times.

Comfort foods vary according to region and ethnicity. Popular ones include miso soup, chicken and matzo ball soup, macaroni and cheese, chicken and dumplings, refried beans, won ton soup, mashed potatoes and gravy, cornbread, meatloaf, apple pie, bread stuffing, brownies, and spaghetti with meatballs (Berkoff). Don’t worry if your favorite food was not on the list. The beauty of comfort food is that it speaks to each of us on individual and emotional levels.

Some researchers have noted that comfort foods are easy to prepare and consume, may be indulgent, and provide a sense of physical and emotional comfort (Locher). However, some chefs and restaurateurs are fine tuning these dishes to draw in new customers while continuing to satisfy nostalgic food lovers. Imagine chicken pot pie being ladled over egg noodles instead of being baked in a pastry crust. Sodexho Corporate Services used this idea of reinventing comfort foods at several of their educational foodservice accounts with great success (Comfort Foods, 35).

Andy Hanacek in the National Provisioner writes that comfort foods are showing up more and more on restaurant menus because the average consumer does not have the time to prepare these foods at home (22). He characterizes comfort foods as slow cooked entrées served with familiar sauces and side items. Some restaurants offer not only more traditional sauces, but also new interesting sauce variations with mustard, curry or plum flavors (Hanacek, 24).

For people who enjoy making their own comfort foods at home, Sue Kreitzman offers recipes and tips in her book, Comfort Food. There are recipes for soups, snacks, sandwiches, main dishes, pastas, grains, breads, vegetables and desserts. Many times, comfort foods are made from memories of times past or from recipes written on cards or backs of envelopes.

In the end, the only thing that matters is the good, positive feelings we get from eating our favorite comfort foods. So the next time you feel stressed out by disappointments in life, enjoy your favorite comfort food and perk up your life.
