

Welcome to
TOMASITA'S

Santa Fe Station

Between 1870 and 1880 when the Wild West was being tamed Railroads became the great connectors. The Denver and Rio Grande between Denver and the Territory of New Mexico was formed. Fondly referred to as the "Chile Line," its seven-hour run from Antonito to Santa Fe through mountain, mesa, and river valley connected villages, pueblos, towns and cultures. The D&RG was the timekeeper, the newspaper, the friend of children, and the transporter of local goods—lumber, pinon, wool, chile and fruit. Due to the decline in the demand for lumber, traffic on the line was greatly reduced in the 30's. And on September 1, 1941, the Chile Line left the Guadalupe Station on its last northbound run.

Today the red-brick station house, constructed in 1904, still stands. It now houses Tomasita's Santa Fe Station, a distinctly Northern New Mexican restaurant. Our recipes have been handed down for generations, and still stand as witness to the melding of cultures that together once depended on the corn, chile, beans and fruit of the area.

A Message to our Guests ...

Residents and frequent visitors have come to love the spice of our cuisine and depend on their chile "fix." At Tomasita's, chile is a main ingredient of our dishes and we serve it HOT. If you are new to the taste, please ask for a sample of our chile before ordering so that we may serve you better.
