Marcus Samuelsson Named 158th DVC at Johnson & Wales University

SAMANTHA KRIVOROT
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

The Distinguished Visiting Chef program of the Johnson & Wales University College of Culinary Arts, established in 1979, provides students an opportunity to learn from, and network with some of the sharpest minds in the culinary world. Culinary and pastry chefs alike are invited to speak to students and demonstrate their talents.

On December 8th, 2009, the Providence campus proudly welcomed 158th DVC, Chef Marcus Samuelsson; the Executive Chef and co-owner of Restaurant Aquavit in New York City, as well as the co-founder and chief creative director of Townhouse Restaurant Group, a restaurant management and consulting firm. Aquavit's African/Scandinavian cuisine is known widely, as Samuelsson's talents are well recognized both locally and globally. "I want to ensure that each guest has the ultimate three-star experience, and leaves Aquavit feeling like they've taken a little trip to Scandinavia without leaving New York," said Samuelsson about his establishment. Chef Samuelsson spoke briefly about his career, gave advice to future culinarians, as well as presenting a demonstration on Doro Wat, a traditional African food, as well as a few other recipes.

In addition to his restaurant projects, Samuelsson is the author of five very successful cookbooks, including the most recent New American Table. He also became the first chef to collaborate with the Starbucks Coffee company, delivering various baked goods and coffee blends.

Chef Samuelsson received a James Beard Foundation Award for "Rising Star Chef" in 1999, and "Best Chef, New York" in 2003. He was also named as one of "The Great Chefs of America" by the Culinary Institute of America. Samuelsson also holds an honorary degree from Johnson & Wales University as a Doctor of Culinary Arts.

Relay For Life at Johnson & Wales University- The Ultimate One Night Stand

TRACY WEAVER
CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Do you know what Relay For Life is? Have you ever Relayed? Do you want to get involved on campus? Relay For Life of Johnson & Wales University is a great way to get active on campus, meet new people, and give back to a cause that is affecting millions of people each year.

RFL is an official fundraiser of the American Cancer Society that thousands of communities and universities sponsor across the globe each year. What is usually a 24-hour walk-a-thon, the mission of RFL is to celebrate the lives of those affected by cancer, remember the lives of lost loved ones, and fight back against a disease that is taking more lives each year.

Our Relay here at Johnson & Wales University is slightly different than what other community events tend to be. It is held indoors at the Harborside Recreational Center. Leading up to the event, anyone can go on our Relay website and create a team. The team can be affiliated with a club or organization on campus, or it can even just be a group of friends. The team captain should then make sure that anyone who wants to participate on that team gets signed up online. Over the course of the weeks leading up to Relay, the team should be raising money.

Remember, this is a fundraiser! Once you are registered, your online page becomes a great tool for team members to use to solicit donations. Team captains are also encouraged to attend team captain meetings where they can learn about the event, how to use the online tool, tips for fundraising, and a whole lot more! This year's RFL event will be held Friday, March 26 starting at 6:00 p.m. - Saturday, March 27, ending at 6:00 a.m., a full 12 hours. Throughout the night, your team is expected to have at least one representative walking the track at all times. There are plenty of activities, theme laps, ceremonies, and food to keep everyone occupied for 12 hours. Remember, cancer never sleeps, so neither will we for the entire night!

Register now for RFL of JWU at www.relayforlife.org/johnson\_walesri

Act fast because the registration fee will be increasing on February 19th. Also, be sure to stop by our official Kick Off event and information session: Wednesday, January 20th at 7:00 PM in Xavier Auditorium. DANIEL BOOTH
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

New York, N.Y. – The Johnson & Wales University women's basketball squad dropped a 74-61 decision against Endicott in the championship game of the CCNY Tournament on Sunday afternoon. In Saturday's victory for JWU, senior Alexia Ramirez (San Marcos, Calif.) became the school's all-time leading scorer. Ramirez and fellow senior Jeniphir Moxley (Lakewood, Wash.) were named to the all-tournament team for the weekend.

In Sunday's setback, Johnson & Wales was led by Ramirez with 15 points and seven rebounds while freshman Allyson Downen (Burlington, Vt.) added 15 points and three rebounds for the Wildcats. Moxley was also in double figures in the loss for JWU with 10 points, four rebounds and two assists.

Endicott had four players in double figures, led by Ashley Wright and Ceciley Chisholm with 19 points a piece while Jen McBrien added 15 points, three rebounds and four assists for the Gulls in the victory.

The two teams traded leads early in the contest with JWU holding the 14-13 lead on a layup by Ramirez with 13:57 left in the first half. The Wildcats held the 36-22 lead on a three pointer by Moxley with 2:54 left in the half and took the 36-32 lead into the locker room at halftime.

Endicott opened the second half with a 19-4 run, capped by a pair of free throws by Wright to give the Gulls the 51-43 advantage with 15:05 left in the contest. Chisholm gave Endicott the 66-53 lead with 5:13 left on the clock and the Gulls then cruised to the 74-61 victory.

With the loss JWU falls to 4-7 while Endicott improves to 6-3 for the season. The Wildcats will return to action on Tuesday, January 5th when they host Nichols in a non-conference contest, starting at 7:00 p.m.

Food and Fun All in One

SAMANTHA KRIVOROT
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

T'was the week before Christmas break, and all through the mall, our stomachs were growling so loudly in the hall. After having spent the entire day (and more than one entire paycheck) Christmas shopping, my friend and I found ourselves in the middle of Nordstrom feeling a little bit hungry.

We were deciding where to go eat, when we discovered the Nordstrom Café, tucked away on the far left, almost unnoticeable.

The atmosphere looked warm and inviting so my friend and I decided to give it a try. The items in the display case looked so appetizing, and there was a good variety of stuff to choose from the made to order items. I decided on a sandwich that was a special that week, a chicken sandwich on Ciabatta bread topped with spinach leaves and garnished with a spread of Boursin cheese and a Coke. My friend also chose Coke for her beverage, but ordered a Turkey Club for her meal. Each of our sandwiches was served with some chips.

Our sandwiches were excellent, but there seemed to be a mishap once we got to dessert. We split a piece of chocolate mousse cake, which we discovered was not made on premises. While this isn't normally a problem, we could detect a slight hint of the beginning stages of freezer burn within the layers of the cake. Also, when the plate arrived to the table, the plate was hot, yet the cake was cold. We had a wonderful time overall, enjoying the lavish atmosphere that Nordstrom is usually known for. Should you ever find yourself a little famished during a shopping trip, remember to stop in the Nordstrom Café for a snack.

Cameron's "Avatar" Proves it's Worth Not Exactly the World's Greatest Movie

STEPHANIE LYMAN
SPORTS EDITOR

When I first saw the previews for the new movie "Avatar," I thought to myself "Yeah, like I'd ever see that". Then, about two weeks ago I saw the four minute long trailer for the movie, and it really sparked my interest. I quickly texted my favorite movie companion, my Dad, and told him that we were going to go see it while I was home for Christmas break, I then googled the movie to see what all the hype was about.

Avatar is the first mainstream movie for director James Cameron since his Oscar winning blockbuster Titanic in 1997. Cameron had been developing Avatar since 1994, its original planned filming and release was supposed to be after Titanic, sometime in 1999. According to Cameron however, for his vision to be matched, he felt that technology needed to "catch up".

The film had a reported studio budget of $237 million. On its opening day of December 18th, Avatar grossed $27 million in the United States and Canada. After its opening weekend, Avatar had grossed $232,180,000 worldwide, that's five million less than it cost to make.

According to the American Film Institute, a "box office flop" is a movie that does not make back what it cost to make in the first place. For example, one of 2009's biggest flop was Will Ferrell's "Land of the Lost," costing an approximated $100 million to make and only grossing $65 million domestically. That makes Avatar not only one of the highest grossing films of the year, but also a box office smash.

Avatar, set in the distant future in another planetary system, is set on a moon by the name of Pandora. A disabled Marine Jake Sully is the twin brother of a deceased scientist which is tapped to inhabit his brother's avatar. While on a routine research expedition, Jake is separated from the group for the night and is forced to survive on his own. As he runs into the creatures of Pandora, he also runs into one of the native people of the land, Neytiri. She is the Princess of the Omatitaya clan and is asked by her Mother to teach Jake the ways of the Na'Vi; so that he can bring it back to the "Dream Walkers" which is what the Omatitaya call the human avatars.

Sully then brings his knowledge of the Na'Vi back to the Marine team who is serving as protection for the U.S. Corporation that is drilling on Pandora. Sully agrees to be the inside informant to Colonel Quaritch, who wants nothing more than to exterminate the Na'Vi once and for all. In a manner similar to the 1990 film "Dances with Wolves," the Na'Vi and the Marines go to war over Pandora, with the ending battle scene culminating in a final battle between Colonel Quaritch and Jake Sully's Avatar form.

The movie, told almost completely in CGI form, shows beautiful images and is being shown in 2-D, 3-D, and at IMAX theaters across the world. The version that I went to go see was two hours and forty minutes of 3-D glasses. I wouldn't have preferred to see the movie in any other way but, that long in 3-D kind of hurts. I must admit that I had a massive headache after sitting there totally engrossed with those dorky glasses on my face.

I would most definitely recommend this movie to others. It is highly entertaining and took Cameron years to develop the concept and make his vision come alive. Everything from the glittering graphics to the made up language of the Na'Vi, it is definitely a must-see.

Overall, I would give the movie three and a half stars. I'm not really a Sci-Fi chick, but the bright colors popping out of the screen were rather amusing. I do believe however, that this movie was something special and there are many more to come like this.

"World's Greatest Dad," depicts an atypical story of a father and his son. Robin Williams plays Lance Clayton while Daryl Sabara joins him as his son Kyle. Williams' character is an English poetry teacher and aspires to be a successful, published author. Growing up without his mother really took its toll on Kyle, as seen in the film. He develops rather strange "personal habits" and insists on an unconventional vocabulary, causing a huge distress between himself and his father. To make matters worse, Mr. Clayton is having a relationship with one of the teachers in his school.

Kyle's life is tragically cut short when he dies in an unfortunate accident, so Lance takes it upon himself to make it look as though his son has committed suicide to conceal his real death. He also writes a fake journal to go along with the scenario. Word of the death and the accompanying journal spreads, and the book eventually becomes published. As the book becomes more and more successful, Mr. Clayton becomes increasingly paranoid, has a breakdown, and admits the real way that his son died.

I've always known Robin Williams to be a comedic actor, but I guess every actor experiments here and there. In my opinion, all of his experimental movies have been a little weird, including this one as well as "One Hour Photo." I suppose the plot of the movie is atypical, just like Williams, but a little too eccentric for my taste.

· Tila Tequila tweeted the other day that she was becoming a mom. Don't feel sorry for the kid just yet, she's actually becoming the surrogate mother for her brother and his wife. She then recanted her tweet saying that because Twitter only allows you to put down 140 characters in the space, "I'm not pregnant yet" was too big to fit. However, she will become a mother to her fiancée Casey Johnson's 3 year old daughter. Let's hope Johnson and daughter Ava take Tila's real last name Nguyen, not her stage name Tequila.

INTERNATIONALLY SPEAKING

AMY LIN
GUEST WRITER

I was born and raised in Boston and I'm of Chinese descent. Boston boasts the only Chinatown in the New England Area. When I was a young girl, especially in grade school, I always felt the need to conform to all my peers at the time. Whether it was listening to the Backstreet Boys vs. N'sync, or wearing Abercrombie vs. American Eagle, I felt the need to fit in with all my little friends. Children can be so brutal because they're too young to value diversity.

It was almost 10 years ago during the summer when I went back to my parents' homeland of China. It was there that I realized how lucky I was to be around cultural diversity. In other parts of the world, and even China, children are still brutal, little girls in frilly pink shirts with shiny jet black pigtails teasing other little girls to tears. The city boys with leather shoes and little navy sport coats picked fist fights with the tougher village kids playing in the park that attended school in the city, who proudly donned ragged clothes, plastic slippers and thick, calloused knuckles.

I just saw these events as a spectator on the street while holding my aunt's hand at the market. Even though I was the same age as the children, I didn't want to play with them... Even though our skin and hair were the same color, I felt we had nothing in common. Don't get me wrong, I love my heritage and everything that it entails from Dim Sum on Sunday mornings to getting red envelopes and visiting loved ones on Chinese New Year. Although they're living through a typical childhood, I felt so lucky because they may never have the chance to eat rice and beans with pork chops or learn to dance to Bachata music as I did at my friend Jenny's house, and they may never be able to eat beefy patties with cocoa bread and watch kids play basketball as I did with my friend Elizabeth on her porch. Later on in life, they may never be able to experience things such as attending a Quincinera, smoking hookah, or going to a hip-hop club. Of course, I didn't realize these things until recently and unfortunately some American children who can have a chance to be surrounded by all this diversity will never experience these things either.

Everyone likes to be comfortable and pretend that there are only people like them in the world. So, we tend to subconsciously surround ourselves with people who are similar to us and are scared to reach out to those who may not have anything in common with us. Even in college, I've come across a few closed-minded people and I wonder if they ever left the rock they lived under until they came to Johnson & Wales. I've always had a diverse group of friends because I was blessed with the cultural experiences of attending school in Boston my whole life from kindergarten to high school. If we didn't get the chance in high school then college is definitely the time to come out of our shells.

For more information on how to get involved or learn about other cultures, contact Lindsay Valdivia at lvaldivia@jwu.edu or 401-598-1855. Please join the I-Club for a global discussion every Monday at 11:30 a.m. or a coffee hour on Thursdays at 2:30 p.m.

Rate My Professor

SAMANTHA KRIVOROT
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

I can't tell you how many times I've had a bad professor throughout my college career. This is my second school that I've attended and I'm sorry to say that I've experienced a problem both times. College is called higher education for a reason, isn't it? Students pay all this money to learn from professors who have spent years in school and received intense training, yet I've come across professors who know barely as much as the students themselves. Is college really worth it, then?

In my old Alma Mater, a Professor was hired to teach a course called College Writing. As class sessions progressed, I learned that she could not spell, but she didn't even know the difference between a simile and a metaphor! I think I learned this kind of material in the 6th grade! She couldn't understand anyone's writing or the phrases they used, yet she claims to hold a Master's Degree from SUNY Albany. It figures...SUNY Albany is widely known in New York for more attention being paid as to which bar to go to this evening rather than one's grades.

Why should I pay close to $2000 to sit in a class and learn nothing? I learned absolutely nothing new from her. In fact, I spent more time correcting the professor in the middle of her lectures because I was so fed up with her incompetence. Needless to say, she wasn't so appreciative of this. It would have been more efficient and worth my time if I taught the class myself. While I wouldn't say that my knowledge of the English language is perfect, I'm confident enough to say that I know it fairly well. I am a journalist and I have quite an extensive vocabulary despite my "college girl" appearance. I came into this class to better my knowledge of the English language, but at the end it felt more like my IQ dropped ten points.

After transferring, this one professor gained my attention rather quickly and made me wonder for what reason he was hired. He mispronounced nearly all of the terms he taught us, and tried impress us with lectures of his past experiences rather than teaching his curriculum. When we did finally crack open our books, he didn't know quite a bit of the answers, so he scrambled and fumbled some BS to make the students believe he knew the correct answer. I distinctly remember one time this happened to me, but I didn't fall for his "logic." I disproved his answer and from then on, the professor knew better than to try and trick me.

A good professor will admit that he/she does not know the answer, and say something to the extent of "That's a good question. I don't know, but I can research it and let you know the answer tomorrow." Johnson & Wales University is known for being "America's career university," so what kind of example are professors setting by feeding their students wrong information and then sending them into the industry? I think there should be stricter hiring guidelines when a school looks for new professors. A restaurant wouldn't (or shouldn't) hire a chef without bench testing them, so this situation should not be any different. I want the money I'm investing in my education to be well worth it. I'm brutally honest on all of my professor evaluations and I encourage other students to be as well.

This Tiger is Not So Grrreat

STEPHANIE LYMAN

During Thanksgiving break Tiger Woods' Escalade met its demise when it crashed into a fire hydrant, mailbox, and met his own Wedge which was being wielded by his lovely wife Elin. At first, speculation was that Woods had either been under the influence of drugs or alcohol. They then came out and said that Woods and his wife Elin were having a fight and he was trying to run away from her, as she was swinging a golf club. Elin had been informed of Tiger's, how shall we say this, "extra-curricular activities".

So, the hot Swedish wife is trying to kill you with one of your own golf clubs and you run the Cadillac Escalade your sponsor paid for into city property? Okay... sounds legit and logical, but what about these so-called affairs you've been having? With the number of women still growing, (he's now in the double digits, by the way) you have to be a little out of your mind to keep this up. Woods is reportedly being held up in Trump International Hotel & Tower in New York City with an entire floor rented and girls coming up along with cases of Vodka and Red Bull, as of January 1st.

One thing that comes to mind is, is Tiger a sex-addict? And yes, sex addiction is a real thing, not just something Chazz Michael Michaels suffers from in "Blades of Glory". Halle Berry's ex-husband was a sex addict, and let's admit you must be a sex addict to cheat on one of the most beautiful women in the world. Sex addiction is likely, but is Tiger just getting caught up in the world of money and being a high profile athlete?

So Tiger's affairs are in the double digits and he's moved out of his house. What's next? At&T, as well as Tag Heuer have already dropped him from their sponsorship, and he's reportedly taking the season off. Elin is apparently trying to heal on her own time with the kids in the French Alps in a Chalet that allegedly costs 5,000 Euros a night. That's a lot of money Tiger; I hope you're footing the bill for your lovely wife, seeing how her birthday was January 1st.

Things just haven't seemed to get any better for Woods. On December 15th, a Canadian sports doctor was under investigation by the F.B.I. for the alleged use of human growth hormones in athletes. Elin, by the way, hasn't stated whether or not she wants to stay with Tiger. Let's hope they work this out civilly for the sake of their kids. As for Tiger, lay off the girls and start getting your life back together, dude. You better find a cure for cancer or something because people are really going to hate you if things keep coming out.

That's all the Tiger news for now. I'm sure there will be more to come in the next issue. Maybe we'll include him in the Celeb Gossip Round Up next time. For this time though there was just a little too much to include.

It Only Happens Once Every Four Years...

STEPHANIE LYMAN
SPORTS EDITOR

It's finally 2010 and that means it's almost time for the Olympics! Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada will play host to the 21st Winter Olympic Games beginning February 12th, and ending on the 28th. At the last Winter Olympics in Torino, Italy in 2006, the United States collected twenty-five medals, nine of them being gold; a drop-off from the success at the 2002 Salt Lake City games, where they collected thirty four, ten of them gold.

This year the featured athletes for the United States are Lindsey Vonn, Shani Davis, and Sasha Cohen. With the final roster spots not fully set for any sport, there could be some upsets in the coming weeks at Olympic Trials. USA Hockey is also looking for a comeback, boasting many big NHL names such as Phil Kessel, Mike Komisarek, and Ryan Whitney. There are currently fifteen sports, with three of the most popular sports being figure skating, alpine skiing, and hockey.

Sasha Cohen looks to become the Queen of Figure Skating at this year's games after missing out on gold in 2006 (Shizuka Arakawa was the Olympic Champion). Cohen has been on hiatus from competitive skating since the 2006 Olympics. Cohen looks to become the eighth Olympic Champion, the last being Sarah Hughes in 2002. Her competition will come from Alissa Cizsny of the United States and 2008 World Champion Moa Asada of Japan. Women's figure skating begins on February 23rd.

In skiing, Lindsey Vonn is looking to take a medal after not placing in her Olympic debut in 2002 and her sophomore appearance in 2006. Vonn, who's had a stellar career in skiing, won the World Titles for the past two years and 22 overall World Cups. She is the most decorated Woman Skier in US history. At the 2006 games Vonn was expected to medal in several skiing events, when on a downhill training run she took a scary spill and wasn't able to place higher than seventh in the events she competed in.

Also returning for their second Olympics is Speed Skater Shani Davis. The 2006 Olympic Champion will be looking to avenge his medal in 1,000 meters long track. Other international competitors looking to medal are Norway's Magnus Moan in the Nordic Combine and Hockey's Angela Ruggiero.

Other not to miss sports at the 2010 Olympic Games include the Men's Hockey quarterfinals and the medal rounds. Canada will be looking to take the gold on its own soil; their last gold came in 2002. The four must-watch countries that will be battling for the three medals are Canada, Russia, Sweden and the United States. The youth of the United States should not be counted out and may be their best asset. Their last medal finish came as silver in 2002.

With the games looming in the ever so close distance, the winter is sure to get a little exciting. Though not being as glitzy and glamorous as the Summer Olympic Games, the Winter Olympics do have appeal. They are full of great competition and are a great excuse to take a night off and stay inside. So wait for February 12th to roll around and grab that nice glass of hot chocolate and try to stay warm during the shortest month of the year.

Johnson & Wales Hockey Knocks Off St. Anselm, 5-4

DANIEL BOOTH
DIRECTOR OF ATHLETIC COMMUNICATIONS

Manchester, N.H.— Freshman Jason Pietrasiak (Shrewsbury, Mass.) scored a hat-trick, including the game-winner with just :20 left to play to give the Johnson & Wales University hockey squad a 5-4 victory against St. Anselm in a non-conference contest on the road on Sunday afternoon.

Pietrasiak tallied an unassisted goal just 8:00 in to give the Wildcats the 1-0 lead. After a power play goal by St. Anselm's Coleman Noonan at 12:47, Pietrasiak answered with his second unassisted tally to give JWU the 2-1 lead at the 13:08 mark. Once again, St. Anselm's responded and a goal by Jim Toomey sent the game tied 2-2 after the first period of play.

St. A's took the 3-2 lead early in the second period on a power play goal by John Hyslip. The visiting Wildcats struck quickly, however as junior Joe Simeone (Cranston, R.I.) put in a pass from sophomore Zach Hamilton (O' Fallon, Ill.) to knot the game at 3-3. The visiting Wildcats then went up 4-3 on a goal by junior Craig Houle (Burrillville, R.I.) at the 12:25 mark. JWU would have the lead through the rest of the stanza before Toomey notched his second goal of the game with just :18 left on the clock to send the game tied 4-4 after two periods of play.

After battling through a scoreless third period, Houle set up Pietrasiak with the game-winner at the 19:40 mark to give JWU the 5-4 victory.

Junior JR Woodland (Picton, Ontario) had 39 saves in the win for Johnson & Wales while Kevin Fairweather had 11 stops in the loss for Saint Anselm.

With the victory Johnson & Wales improves to 4-8 for the season while Saint Anselm falls to 3-4 for the year. The Wildcats will return to action on Tuesday, January 12th when they host Tufts in a non-conference contest, starting at 7:00 p.m.
