JWU Introduces New Majors

Tirelessly working to increase the university appeal to prospective students, Johnson & Wales University has continued to add new study fields such as Criminal Justice, and Equine Business Management. The 2013-2014 academic year will see the addition of two new Bachelors and one Master degree: Communication Studies, Liberal Studies, and Physician Assistant Studies. These new additions are very exciting for the university, as it shows that Johnson & Wales is now also taking a new direction and opening up more opportunities for a Liberal Arts degree for its students.

Developed for close to a year by professors Dr. Christopher J. Westgate and Dr. Scott Oberacker and assisted by other faculty members, among them Dr. Amy Neeman and professor Tamara Garcia. The new Communication Studies, or "Media Studies," as explained by Dr. Westgate, will be an "Inner - disciplinary, multi-disciplinary" degree. Besides the ten core classes, the major will also offer a large range of elective courses that focus on different aspects of the media field. This will allow students to not only be able to pick and choose classes that fit their personal interest and possible career goals, but also help them receive a broader understanding of each medium and of media in general. According to Dr. Westgate, the "all encompassing" broad nature of the major will allow undecided students the advantage of learning all of the different mediums and aspects in media, a knowledge that in today's cross medium industry might become very useful. Another exciting element of the major is its internship.

Unlike other similar programs in other universities, at JWU the student will have the flexibility to decide how many credit hour he or she wishes his or her internship to count towards the degree; this number can range anywhere from the regular 4.5 credit hours to 13.5 credits of a full trimester.

The Liberal Studies major will have three paths: General Studies, Math and Science Studies, and Humanitarian/Social Sciences Studies. With these, students must also choose areas of study in business or technology. Upon completion of the program, graduates will receive a Bachelor of Science in Liberal Studies.

Professor Donna Thomsen, department chair and associate professor here at Johnson & Wales, stated that there are two minors to choose from; these are project management and general business. Within the major, there are also applied learning requirements that include study abroad or an internship. As for the fall, the class size is expected to be a moderate size.

The Liberal Studies major also offers a great opportunity for students to pursue their own academic interests. The major places a focus on liberal arts, with a practical career focus. This major is great for those who are interested in arts and sciences, but also want the skills to be successful in a business environment and wish to experience the hands-on education that Johnson & Wales offers.

Bidding Farewell to Johnson & Wales Inn

Nicole Guzman
Advertising Manager

The students who have attended Johnson & Wales University in the past 30 years are well aware of the Inn that has been owned by the University since the 1980's. Although the Inn has been very beneficial and welcoming to over hundreds of student guests and families, the time has come to say farewell. In July 2012, the University announced that it would seek new ownership of the Johnson & Wales Inn, and on June 3, 2013, the sale of the Inn to Sarchi Group of Massachusetts was completed, and the Inn is now the Hilltop Hotel & Conference Center.

For over 30 years, the Johnson & Wales Inn has given many students the opportunity of a great internship experience, as well as job opportunities for student employee staff. The experiential education in the University's strategic plans, FOCUS 2011, and now 2017: The Centennial Plan, the University offers 1,700 internship sites in 49 states, providing more than 4,000 internship positions. Due to the growth in external internship opportunities, the University has decided to discontinue services at the Johnson & Wales Inn.

The Johnson & Wales Inn was the University's first hotel internship property. Therefore, the Inn has played a significant role in JWU history. The University thanks the Inn's staff for their dedication and commitment to provide an excellent guest experience and for their work with Johnson &

Wales students.

Representatives of the Sarchi Group have met with the Inn staff about the possibility of continued employment. The University will be providing assistance to the Inn employees through this transition.

Nonetheless, under new management the property will remain open to welcome guests, and host meetings and special occasions.

New Majors Continued...

Opening in June 2014, Johnson & Wales Physician Assistant master studies is already ground breaking by being the first P.A. program to open in Rhode-Island.

The program is scheduled to be taught over the course of 24 months and will entitle its graduates with a master in Physician Assistant Studies. In order to apply for the program, applicants will require to have a Bachelor degree—preferably in relating subjects, reference letters, a GRE exam grade, as well as at least 250 hours of direct patient contact. The university hopes it will help prospective students understand the demands of the job and working with patients, and will help to maintain a low or non-existent drop-out rate. The program's first year will focus on theoretical applications, allowing students to build their knowledge and understanding of the profession. During their second year, students will go into their clinical studies phase, doing hospital rotations which will assist them to see first-hand what it is like to be working as a P.A. while in the process exploring a ray of specialties they could focus on once they graduate.

One of the major's biggest appeals will be the brand new state of the art "Center for Physician Assistant Studies". The building, located at the Downcity campus on Clifford St., will be exclusively used by the P.A. program. In addition, in early 2013, Johnson & Wales announced that it has joined in collaboration with Brown University. The agreement, as mentioned in the physician assistant program page, will allow both universities to share "training facilities, jointly arranging lectures, pursuing educational grants, and engaging in cost-sharing."

Heading the program will be George S. Bottomley, a graduate of the Yale P.A. program, who prior to arriving at Johnson & Wales headed the physician assistant program at the University of New England.

To learn more about the P.A. program and how to apply, contact the program admission officer Lauren Huber: lbrignachuber@admissions.jwu.edu

Professionalism... Or The Absence Of It

Krista Christensen
Culinary Arts and Life & Style Editor

As many people know, Johnson & Wales was founded as a business school in 1914 by Gertrude I. Johnson and Mary T. Wales. The university was founded to provide business education to its students. Now, almost one hundred years later, Johnson & Wales is recognized as one of the most career driven universities that provides a unique education for its students. As students at Johnson & Wales, we are educated on how to be professional and we are also given the resources to excel in our field of interest. The experiential education office helps us build our resume and practice our interview skills.

With all of that being said, I was completely surprised by the lack of professionalism I experienced during a recent job interview. I interviewed with an executive chef of a hotel hoping for a job in the kitchen or one of the hotel's restaurants. I was shocked by his demeanor and how I was treated throughout the interview.

Previous to the interview, I was contacted by a woman in the hotel's human resources office. She wanted to set up a day and time to meet with the very busy executive chef. Her and I discussed my interview for the following day; what time the interview would be and where. The next day I arrived at the hotel for my interview about fifteen minutes early. I was given a friendly greeting by the gentleman working at the front desk and he explained how to get to the human resources office. Once I arrived at the office, I was again greeted very friendly by the gentleman working there. He told me that he would inform the executive chef that I had arrived. Every interaction was very friendly and professional up to this point.

After waiting close to forty five minutes for my interview to begin, I was finally brought to the kitchen for my interview. Once I arrived in the kitchen, I brought to a very busy executive chef. After he finished giving instructions and taking phone calls he walked over to me. I expected him to introduce himself and shake my hand, but I didn't get any of that. The executive chef just looked at me and then looked at my feet (I was wearing sandals) and asked me "Where are your shoes?" I was completely confused and then he said "You're not wearing the right shoes. I wanted to give you a bench test but I guess I can't do that. It looks like you're going to have to come back another day." At this point I was humiliated. I told him that I wasn't informed by human resources that I would be cooking during this interview. After a loud groan, the executive chef told me to sit in his office. He was looking over my resume and said "You're not a culinary major?" I replied "No. I'm a Restaurant, Food and Beverage major." He proceeded to say that he was under the impression I was a culinary major. After talking with him about my experience he seemed unimpressed and uninterested in anything else I was going to say. After some awkward silence he informed me that I didn't have enough experience to be working for him. That was the end of my interview. The executive chef then brought me back to the human resources office and didn't even try to talk to me during the whole walk there. Once we arrived at the human resource office he said to the person at the desk "Well, I'm done with her. You can keep her entertained for twenty minutes while she waits for the restaurant manager to talk to her." He didn't even call me by name but I was professional when he went to leave and said "It was a pleasure meeting with you chef. Thank you for making the time to meet with me, I really appreciate it." All he said was "You're welcome" and I never saw him again.

This interview was awkward, humiliating and completely unprofessional. I was flabbergasted by the executive chef's actions and his overall attitude. As a graduate of Johnson & Wales, he was taught the principles of professionalism just like I'm being taught now. It was obvious that the power he has at the hotel has gone to his head and has inflated his ego. After this interview, I don't want to pursue any career at the hotel. Although this was such an awful experience, I learned a lot from it. It reminded me what power can do to people. It taught me how not to treat potential employees. Most importantly, it taught me that no matter what job I get in the future, I need to remember where I started from and that professionalism is so important.

THE STREET FEED

What advice do you have for the incoming freshmen?

Take advantage of all that the campus has to offer, make sure you don't pressure yourself too much, talk to the Resident Assistant's (RA's) in your hall about any of your concerns and be sure to have fun and enjoy yourself. Balance and time management is really important as a college student. Make sure to be safe while enjoying the city. Most importantly, go to class!

-Leslie Dunn, Sports Entertainment and Events Management, Senior

Why do you think it is important to get involved with clubs and organizations on campus?

I think it's good to be involved on campus because you are in college to not only better yourself selectively, but to better yourself as a whole. When it comes down to networking, it's one of the best things you can do because it allows you to be involved with more than one person.

- Manuel Quintanilla, Business Management, Junior

What do you think is the most important factor when trying to adapt to life away from home?

I think one of the most important factors when trying to adapt is definitely getting involved on campus. The best thing you can do while in college is taking advantage of every opportunity that you have. Basically, get involved and definitely take advantage of what Johnson & Wales has to offer, it will help you adapt faster.

- Luiza Valeno, Sports Entertainment and Events Management

What event during the school year would you recommend incoming students to not miss?

If I were an incoming freshmen, I wouldn't miss Student Activities Night because it gives you the chance to see all of the Clubs and Organizations here at Johnson & Wales, also it gives you the opportunity to actually see the people who are involved oppose to going into the Student Activities Center and seeing the list so you get to interact and communicate more.

- Brittany Jumonville, Criminal Justice, Junior

UIB Keeps the Campus Busy Year Round

Nicole Guzman
Advertising Manager

Each trimester the University Involvement Board (UIB) hosts a series of event to engage the Johnson & Wales community. UIB started off strong last year with their Annual Welcome Week. It was one to remember last year with events such as Student Activities Night, in which all Clubs and Organizations on campus were to display all that the organization has to offer. This is always a great success with a great number of students in attendance.

UIB continued searching for fun filled activities for incoming freshmen and returning student at JWU. With events such as Hypnotist Jim Spinnato, a trip to Six Flags New England, a Poster Sale, the Gaebe Commons University Convocation, and Coffee & Tea with UIB to wrap up the week. UIB continued with great success throughout the winter term with the weekly movie screenings on the 2nd floor of the Wildcat Center. Students were able to watch recently released movies for free every Thursday! UIB also held "Iced Bingo" where students were possibly able to walk away with a free ice-cream maker. UIB Bingo nights are usually filled with JWU students of all cohorts, with $400 worth in prizes! It's always an exciting night when you can walk away with something new for free.

UIB realizes that the winter trimester on campus tends to keep residents in-doors; therefore, they put in their best efforts to continue interactions between students on campus. UIB booked comedian Adam Mamawala at Schneider Auditorium and held the annual "One Ton Sundae" out in Gaebe Commons where students were able to enjoy free ice cream. UIB's countless efforts do not go unnoticed as they host social events throughout the holiday season. "Not my Gumdrop Button-Gingerbread Decorating" was held at Weybossett Café where free hot chocolate was provided. Also, who can forget about one of the most exciting times of year; the Super Bowl XLVII Party? UIB provided food and refreshments for students to watch the game together at the 2nd floor of the Wildcat Center. Who can pass on wings and good company?

UIB hosted their final "Spring Fling Week" with fun in mind. Events such as Beach Bingo, Found Footage Festival, Spa Day, Criss Cross Collision, a movie screening of Movie 43, the Annual Battle of the Campus, the Wahoo Concert, and a Wahoo 3k race. Talk about ending the year right! This organization knows exactly what the JWU community wants and has much more in store for the year to come!

The UIB executive board consists of Johnson & Wales Students who strive extremely hard to constantly engage all students around campus. Whether it's a simple spa day to help relax students during finals week, or an exciting Wahoo Carnival to celebrate a successful year, UIB does it all. The students on the executive board are everyday students who enjoy bringing new ideas to campus; you can be one of them. If you are interested in joining UIB, contact the organization through the Involvement Network.

The Woman who Whisked America Away

The Life of Julia Child

Ali Fuller
I&O/Tech & Design Editor

Bon appétit! These two words might possibly remind many foodies of a significant and remarkable culinary figure: Julia Child. Born on August 15, 1912, Julia altered American housewives' perceptions of the art of cooking by her techniques shown on TV and written in her literature. It's rare for one figure to change the beliefs, attitudes, and food culture all throughout America.

Living an ambitious life at a young age, Julia had visions to travel the world. She came from a wealthy family, subsiding in Pasadena, California. During her high school years she went to San Francisco's elite Katherine Branson School for Girls. She was an awkward 6 feet, 2 inches, and the tallest student in her class. She was known to many as "a prankster, who could be really, really wild," and was incredibly talented in golf, tennis, and small-game hunting. She attended college in 1930 at Smith College in Northampton, Massachusetts, with the dream of becoming a writer. Shortly after college, with no luck of having any work published, she moved to New York City and worked in advertising at W&J Sloane, a home furnishings company.

Shortly after being fired from her job for "gross insubordination," Julia moved to Washington D.C. in 1941, at the beginning of World War II. In D.C. she volunteered as a research assistant for the Office of Strategic Services (OSS). It was while working for the OSS where Julia met her husband Paul Child. At the end of World War II, in September 1946, the two were married. Paul's job was reassigned to the American Embassy in Paris, causing the Childs to move to France. It was this move which changed Julia Child and her image forever.

Julia attended Cordon Bleu cooking school in Paris, France. After six months of intense culinary classes, Julia and her colleagues Simone Beck and Louisette Bertholle formed their own cooking school called L'Ecole de Trois Gourmandes (The School of Three Gourmands). Julia and her two partners worked to transform the complex French cuisine into a two-volume American cookbook. It was released in September of 1961 and was titled Mastering the Art of French Cooking. The book was the bestselling cookbook for five straight years after being published.

Then in 1962, Julia starred in her first episode of The French Chef. Her cookbook and television show changed the way Americans connected to food. Shortly after her TV premier, she became a whole-hearted, quirky American celebrity. She made regular appearances on Good Morning America, won an Emmy Award, and the George Foster Peabody Award, both in 1964. Julia went on to star in three other television programs, and wrote a slew of bestselling cookbooks covering a broad range of culinary topics.

According to biography.com, everyone did not favor Julia. She was frequently condemned for her poor kitchen demeanor. A letter once stated "You are quite a revolting chef, the way you snap bones and play with raw meats." To some this was seen as a weakness, but to many this was seen as a strength of Julia's. She was able to let loose and make cooking fun for Americans across the country.

In 1993, Julia was the first woman inducted into the Culinary Institute

Hall of Fame. Nine years later, in 2002, the Smithsonian's National Museum of American History in Washington D.C. revealed an exhibit featuring Julia's kitchen, where she filmed three of her popular cooking shows.

She died in August of 2004 of kidney failure, two days before her 92 birthday. Even though she has been gone for almost 9 years, Julia's memories and culinary passion continue to live on. Her cookbook, Mastering the Art of French Cooking, is a classic with a number of fantastic French recipes, easily accessible and readable by Americans.

The spring season is an opportunity to take advantage of all the fresh and local abundance of produce at local markets. So put on an apron and start mixing it up in the kitchen French style... Bon appétit!

Build Your Own Bar

Elizabeth King
Staff Writer

In today's fast-paced, grab-and-go society, many people of all ages are switching to energy bars as a portable meal replacement. It is commonly believed that eating in a rush can be bad for your health, but it is better than going without food for hours on end. Starving your body can lead to a collapse in blood sugar and metabolic rate (both of which can cause you to feel tired and gain weight among other things), as well as the desire to overeat when a meal finally comes. Energy bars are a good option for those who need a filling snack but don't have the time or resources to eat a container full of carrot sticks or a handful of nuts.

Unfortunately, many energy bars on the market today are filled with sugar and fillers that do just as much damage to your body as a candy bar. Many people have the misconception that all granola bars are healthy, but many big-name brands load their bars with sweetener and preservatives so that they will taste better to the average person.

However, it is possible (and very easy) to make your own energy bars and save yourself from all of the unhealthy products on the market. You can create a personalized bar with the flavors you want. In fact, many people have all the ingredients they need already in their pantry!

Here is a simple formula, courtesy of the No Meat Athlete website (don't worry omnivores, these aren't just for vegetarians), that you can follow to create your own protein or snack bar:

- * 1-pound can of beans, drained and rinsed (or 1.5 cups cooked beans)
- * 1/2 cup binder
- * 1/4 cup sweetener
- * 1/4 cup soft sweet fruit

Homemade protein bars.
Courtesy of chocolatechillmango.

- * 1 teaspoon of extract (optional)
- * 1 teaspoon of dry spice (optional)
- * 1/4 teaspoon sea salt
- * 1.5 cup of oats
- * 1 cup dry base ingredient
- * 1 cup stir-ins

1. In a food processor, combine beans, binder, sweetener, soft fruit, extract, spice, and salt until smooth.

2. Add the oats and dry base ingredients and pulse just to combine.

3. Add stir-ins and pulse again just to combine. If the consistency seems spreadable, you're good. If it's too dry, add 1/4 cup of water; if it's too runny, add an additional 1/4 cup of the dry base ingredient.

4. Grease 13x9 pan with baking spray or rub with 1 tablespoon oil, then spread mixture into pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 15-18 minutes.

Note: You'll have the most success if you use unsalted, unsweetened versions of the ingredients, and control the sweetness and saltiness through the sweetener and added salt.

Recommended beans:

White beans, black beans, pinto beans, chickpeas, adzuki beans

Recommended binders:

Almond butter, peanut butter, 1/4 cup of ground flax seed mixed with 1/4 cup water, pureed pumpkin, mashed avocado

Recommended sweeteners:

Maple syrup, brown rice syrup, agave nectar, honey

Recommended soft, sweet fruit:

Applesauce, mashed banana, chopped dates, crushed pineapple

Recommended optional extracts:

Vanilla, almond, lemon, coconut, coffee

Recommended dry spices:

Cinnamon, ginger, nutmeg, cardamom, instant coffee

*For stronger spices like nutmeg and cardamom, use just a 1/4-1/2 teaspoon and combine with less intense spices like cinnamon.

Recommended dry base ingredient (a combination is usually best):

Protein powder, brown rice flour, spelt flour, cocoa (max 1/2 cup), whole-wheat flour, buckwheat flour

Recommended stir-ins:

Shredded coconut, chopped dried fruit, chopped nuts, cacao nibs, dry cereal, crushed pretzels, chocolate chips

This simple formula is a fantastic way to cut sugar, calories, and unhealthy fats from your on-the-go snack and personalize your energy bars on a budget. A single batch will provide you snacks for quite a while, so it doesn't take much more time than a trip to the store. Of course, this formula may not be perfect depending on your ingredients, but experimenting with it in the kitchen can be a fun (and delicious) adventure!

Ben Suple: Introduces Birch

Adam Bofoni
Staff Writer

It all started with "Hello!" It was the first tweet from @birchPVD, the Twitter moniker of soon-to-be restaurant, birch. Ben Suple is a nationally acclaimed chef and a Johnson & Wales University graduate. He has also been the chef at Providence's The Dorrance restaurant. Suple and his wife Heidi are opening a brilliant, new restaurant at 200 Washington Street (The space formerly occupied by Tini). Providence's food scene has been buzzing with anticipation for birch to open. It is set to open in mid-June.

Suple is known for his unique approach to food, in which not a single ingredient goes unnoticed. He puts time and passion into selecting the finest produce, meat and seafood from small, local farms and distributors. The menu at birch will focus on exactly that, with a small, a la carte menu which will be constantly changing with the seasons, and with ingredient availability. So far, 2013 has brought amazing restaurants to Providence; such as The Grange, and everyone is expecting to welcome birch as a

Cartoon Network's Revolution

Elizabeth King
Staff Writer

When it comes to an obsession with nostalgia, people born in the 1990s seem to be at the top of the pack. I know very few 90s kids who don't reminisce about their childhood and wish that kids today could understand the joy that they experienced in their youth. Yet, in a sense, the legacy of the 90s is not as dead as some may believe. Many of us 90s kids watched Cartoon Network growing up, and even more recognize the cartoons simply from the impact that they had on the world of animation. Cartoons like Dexter's Laboratory (my personal favorite), Ed, Edd, and Eddy, and Codename: Kids Next Door were some of the fun works that made kids laugh and glue their eyes to a TV for hours. With the number of people who wish they could watch the old shows again, it's no wonder many of these old cartoons are now available on Netflix.

However, there is plenty more to this 90s revival, as was revealed by the 2013 Cartoon Network lineup. Many returning shows were listed, but the stars of the reveal were the new shows that will begin airing in the summer and fall seasons. Among them are shows such as a new Batman and Total Drama series (both of which I cannot wait to see), but the most surprising were the number of works that 90s kids may be very familiar with.

The first 90s throwback is the new series, "Teen Titans Go!" which is a more comedic spin on the original "Teen Titans" that was based off of the DC comic series of the same title. "Teen Titans Go!" features a more youthful, 'chibi' art style, but has brought back the voice-cast of the original. The show follows superheroes Robin, Starfire, Cyborg, Beast Boy, and Raven through their everyday lives in between saving the world. Considering the intense, thoughtful plot of the original, this shift into a sillier, comedic genre will certainly be a divide from what fans are familiar with.

The next series is a remake of the classic cartoon "The Tom and Jerry Show," and producer Warner Bros. Animation has kept a similar art style and the theme of the rivalry between cat and mouse. The characters are basically identical to the original, and the only major change has been the rise in animation to vibrant HD. Fans of the original can now watch Jerry pound Tom over the head with a hammer with brighter colors and smoother motions.

Finally, Cartoon Network announced what possibly made the biggest splash of the 2013 reveal: a new Powerpuff Girls movie. Like "Teen Titans Go!", the original cast of "The Powerpuff Girls" returned to perform for this remake, but this is one of the only similarities that the special has with the 90s version. The animation and art styles are radically different. Perhaps the most exciting news of the special is the appearance of musical legend Ringo Starr playing a role as "Fibonacci Sequins," a flamboyant mathematician. Starr also performed a musical theme for the movie, titled "I Wish I Was A Powerpuff Girl." Although the art style may be unappealing to some, the return of the original voice-cast after many years and the appearance of a former Beatle in this movie definitely make it a force to be reckoned with.

This new lineup certainly has captured the attention of many fans. This coming shortly after the return of the late-night anime segment "Toonami" shows that Cartoon Network is doing its best to reach out to a broader audience. We can only wait and see what they will come up with next.

The Illusion of Magic

Maya Shemolewitz
Staff Writer

In a sea of prequels, sequels, and remakes the underappreciated "Now You See Me," directed by Louis Leterrier, is perhaps one of this summer's best movies. With a poster and a plot idea teasing to the "Ocean's 11" franchise, "Now You See Me" promises to deliver two hours of just that; a high-tech heist job. As the movie opens we are introduced to J. Daniel Atlas (Jesse Eisenberg,) an arrogant cards master; Henley Reeves (Isla Fisher,) an escape artist who also happens to be Atlas former assistant; Merritt McKinney (Woody Harrelson,) an hypnotist who uses less than virtuous methods to earn his dough; and Jack Wilder (Dave Franco,) a quick-with-the-hand thief. These four, unknown street illusionists are invited by a mysterious person to perform what is promised be the greatest magic trick of their careers, live in front of thousands of people. However, it is this seemingly larger-than-life-trick that attracts the attention of not only Thaddeus Bradley (Morgan Freeman,) a former magician who now spends his time disproving the secrets behind magic, but also of FBI agent Dylan Rhodes (Mark Ruffalo).

There is no doubt the movie's basic plot borrows heavily from the Ocean's franchise; yet, even with less star power, the movie still manages to have a fresh, exciting, and thought provoking plotline of its own throughout the movie. But as with all things magic, everything is all but an illusion as nothing is what it seems. As Bradley nicely sums it up: "Come in close. Because the more you think you see. The easier it will be to fool you."

There's no Place Like Home: Traveling Tips That Could Save You Dough!

SAVE CASH! TRAVEL SMART!

Dan Davila
Staff Writer

Everyone knows that being a student isn't one of the best paid jobs in the world (haha, very funny). So, if that's the case, why is it that students are hopelessly bombarded with outrageous expenses all year round? Tuition, books, food, rent, to list a few, are constantly haunting students who are most likely living paycheck to paycheck as it is.

Another expense that most students willingly endure is the traveling expenses between school and home. Being from the frozen Minnesota tundra in the far away land known as the Midwest, my traveling expenses aren't exactly the cheapest. Over my time in school, I constantly found myself shaking my piggy bank dry for every last cent to pay for transportation back to the breadbasket of America. Because of this, I came up with some useful tips that have saved my bank account once or twice and

1. Purchase in advance

Traveling websites and airlines know that the closer you buy to the travel date, the more desperate you are for the ticket and jack up the prices daily to make sure they get as much money out of you as they can (I know, they're awful people). Evading these price jack ups is easy: the sooner you buy, the less you'll pay. This can be a bit tricky for students because most of them don't even know how they are paying for the gas bill, let alone their plane ticket home. But, nonetheless, purchasing airfare in advance can drastically reduce the prices of your ticket, giving you a little extra money to splurge on some heat in the winter.

2. Monday-Sunday

It seems that every time there is a term break, there is a mob of students fleeing the residence halls worse than the stampede from The Lion King (although they act much like the animals of the African brush.) I know, I get it. The allure of going home to see your suffocating parents and your abhorrent siblings is something everyone cannot wait to do, but try having some patience. It could save you a buck or two. Purchasing a plane, bus, or train ticket for the beginning of the week can reduce travel fees notably. Plus, look on the bright side; you can use the extra time to contemplate why you want to go home in the first place.

3. It's a bird! It's a plane!

Nope... it's a bus

Yeah, I know. Doesn't sound that great. I'm not saying to take a bus all the way back home, but taking buses to alternate destinations during travel can save you loads of cash. For instance, I have saved pockets full of Benjamins by busing it from Providence to Boston and flying out of Logan International.

The larger the airport, the cheaper the flights. Spending about 20 bucks on a bus to Boston can save you around 100 dollars on airfare. Plus, busses don't have stewardesses and we all know how annoying they are. So next time you want to fly out of (the oh so convenient) T.F. Green, look at your bank account balance and check the bus listings.

4. Choo-Choo!

I'm sure you're thinking, "Oh, so you want us to waste our time on a train?" And yes, that is exactly what I'm saying. It may seem like the end of the world to waste your precious time on a train ride, but it's really not that bad. In fact, most trains are nicer than planes now-a-days. The chairs are more comfortable, there is more foot room, and best of all, you can get some quality food while you're traveling (and I'm not talking about a bag of peanuts and a glass of flat soda). Some of these trains have full service meals! And most importantly, it can knock off about a third of airfare. Taking a train may not be your cup of tea (I know, you like coffee) but when you're a poor, minimum-wage-making student, I think you'll trade in the Keurig for a kettle (Ah, you see what I did there?).

Being a broke college student isn't the best experience you'll have but it's about being in school. Using these tips on cheap travel can save you hundreds of dollars over your time spent in school. Money that could be spent on any of your other expenses, or you weekend habits. So next time you're home sick and need mommy to cradle you to sleep, be mindful of your budget and find the cheapest way home (unless you're Dorothy... Then just click your heels together and you'll be fine).

Friends With Benefits

To properly respond to this subject you must know what friends with benefits means. It is a friend that you have sex with in the aims of becoming nothing more or less than what you were with that person prior to the sexual acts. Even knowing this, I still cannot comprehend why anyone would want to do this since this type of relationship rarely survives and can cause more pain and drama than an actual romantic relationship. I am under the impression that people engage in this act to avoid "dry spells" after they've left a relationship. Or just to fulfill sexual desires without having to deal with all the rules and regulations of being in a romantic relationship.

This being said, why would you use your friend as an object to try to avoid a forecast of an unbearable sexual desire or assume that they would agree to the proposal of friends with benefits without catching feelings for you? Humans cannot help how they feel most of the time and one or both parties begin to want each other emotionally. I can't quite wrap my head around wanting someone only for a few of their body parts and not the whole human. Apparently, this generation has become accustomed to chopping up the opposite sex into segments and dehumanizing them by forgetting that those body parts belong to one whole human and is equipped with complex emotion that usually cannot be controlled.

The only way I see this working is if both parties have clearly established that it is just sex and that if someone begins to develop feelings for the other they must decide to stop this friends with benefits deal. They would also need to discuss which direction to go in next. Although, this won't solve the problem of the secret getting out to other circles because humans are social creatures and will most likely tell at least one person about how much fun they're having with their friends with benefits. Should this friends with benefits relationship end painlessly, both parties have to consider that if your next romantic relationship partner learns that you were sleeping with your friend they may not feel comfortable sticking around for much longer.

Warming up to JWU Link

Ryland Grudzinski
Staff Writer

If you're coming to Johnson & Wales in the Fall, chances are you've already heard of JWU Link, or maybe even used it. If not, you should familiarize yourself with some of JWU Link's most useful pages and features. College is a challenging experience, but by using JWU Link to its potential, you can make it a little easier on yourself. Though it took me a while to realize my freshman year, JWU Link has many more uses besides checking your school email. One of the most useful parts of JWU link is the Registration & Grades page, where you can find everything from your academic standing to your official transcripts and grades. All class scheduling is done on this page as well, so make sure to scroll down and familiarize yourself with your earned credits, holds, and registration start date.

Another important feature is the Financial page. It's important to stay on top of your loans, financial aid, and scholarships while at school, and this page will help you do that. From here, it's easy to see the status of any school payments or awards you may have. You can also find printable copies of various tax forms and applications you may need while applying for aid or scholarships. If you have any questions, or just need some advice about your financial situation, you can easily contact Student Academic & Financial Services directly from the page.

Chances are, most of your time on JWU Link will be spent on ulearn. While there is a lot of great reference material on JWU Link, ulearn is where professors will post grades, assignments, and current information about their class. Once registered, each class you are taking will show up as a tab on the side of the page. Click through often, as most professors expect students to be checking ulearn on their own for newly assigned material.

While it may seem JWU Link is only for academic purposes, there are plenty of other resources for people seeking information on clubs, organizations, and student services. Through the Student Life page, you can check dining hall menus, browse the campus bookstore, and check the academic calendar for any upcoming school events. Lastly, in case you missed the score of the last JWU soccer game, or need to know when the next wrestling home match is, you can check all that here as well.

JWU Link can be as useful as you make it. Of course, you can get by with only checking your email once a week, or by rarely stopping by ulearn for class information, but the more you use these features, the better your JWU experience will be.

Xbox One and PS4 Fight for E3 Spotlight

Ryland Grudzinski
Staff Writer

It's that time of year again, where video game fanatics swarm the Los Angeles Convention Center for a chance to see some of the industry's newest innovations. E3 (the Electronic Entertainment Expo) has been the premier source of gaming news since it was first held in 1995, and this year is no different. With the new generation of consoles possibly launching as early as December, publishers and developers alike are pushing hard to get their new content in front of the masses.

After the mediocre reception the Xbox One received at its unveiling, Microsoft had some catching up to do. With no used games, no indie developer support, and a $499 price tag, the pressure was on to change consumers' opinions. They came to E3 with a promise to release 15 Xbox exclusives within the first year, including 8 completely new titles, and what better time to announce them then now? Here are just some of the most exciting titles currently in development. Ryse: Sons of Rome is a brand new title being developed by Crytek, and will bring players to the brutal world of the Roman Empire. Visually impressive and action packed, Ryse was definitely one of the most entertaining reveals to watch. Unfortunately, little else is known about the game. Going in a completely different direction, there's Project Spark. Project Spark aims to make game creation a game itself. The player begins by sculpting a world, then filling it with moving parts. Choose the protagonist, and then be prepared to defend your custom world from whichever dangers you choose.

Sony gladly took advantage of the shaky Xbox launch while unveiling their Playstation4. Making sure to hit all the points Microsoft missed, Sony supports both used games and independent developers. This has created a huge potential market for upcoming game makers, who can now develop their own titles and publish them to the PS4's online marketplace, much like Steam for PC. The design of the PS4 is modest; it's slimmer than the Xbox One and looks like it would fit well with other home entertainment systems. Priced at $399, the PS4 is shaping up to deliver the most bang for the buyer's buck in this generation of consoles.

The PS4 kept its momentum going with the announcement of several new titles available within the first year of launch. Sequels of loveable series such as Killzone, Infamous, and Kingdom Hearts have already made appearances through gameplay videos, though not much else has been revealed. The Order: 1886 is a completely new title in development, and will feature both a male and female protagonist as they fight off demonic threats to the world. The extent of the plot is still unknown, but the visuals and style of the game are enough to keep fans interested until more is released.

It's clear this year's E3 was dominated by the newest generation of consoles. While we may not be seeing any of these on the shelves for several months, the cutting edge technology and flashy new titles will have to be enough to satisfy fans until any actual releases. For more information about the newest developments at E3, be sure to stop by e3expo.com.
