The Southern and Cantonese Regions of China have a warm tropical climate. This area is ideally suited to rice and vegetable growing and also has abundant access to coastal seafoods. The cooking frequently combines the freshest vegetables and meats with delicate aromatic sauces such as those found in Moo Goo Gai Pan and Sweet and Sour Shrimp.

Canton, one of the largest cities in the region, lends its name to the area’s general style of cooking. During the late 1800’s a great many people from this area emigrated to the United States. Today, the Cantonese style of cooking continues to be the most popular form of Chinese food preparation in America.

Although the Far Western Regions of China remain largely unpopulated, the Szechuan and Hunan provinces are known for their use of nuts and hot chili peppers to give their cuisines a distinctive spicy flavor. The climate in the Western regions varies widely from the semitropical heat of the lower plains to the frigid cold of the Tibetan Himalayas.

Long overshadowed by Cantonese cooking here in the United States, spicy Szechuan flavors are now growing rapidly in popularity in this country.
